Deputies Vote To Ban Profit In France's Arms Trade

Government Gets Largest Majority

Premier Says Loans Are an Act of Liberation From Money Class.

By the United Press.

Paris, July 17.—Premier Leon Blum, head of France's Popular Front government, promised tonight to "settle accounts" with profiteering capitalists.

In a broadcast appeal to the nation after the Chamber of Deputies, voting to nationalize the French arms industry, gave Blum's government its largest parliamentary majority yet, the premier said of the capitalists:

"We don't need them. We don't want them."

The Chamber of Deputies voted 484 to 85 to "take the profits out of war," ending a 30-year debate on the subject. It debated only six and a half hours in two and a half sessions.

Broadcasts Appeal.

Then Blum went on the air in an appeal to the 'common people" to buy new French treasury certificates—"baby bonds."

"The money realized will not be destined to permit the routine expediency by which government lives from day to day," he said. "The money must furnish us a means to execute a policy of universal suffrage, a policy we have chosen."

He said he refused to appeal for funds to capitalists who exported capital abroad to escape taxes or who betrayed the elementary duty of solidarity.

"I refuse to make concessions to this class," Blum said. "One day or another the nation will settle accounts with bad citizens who in perilous crises tried to profit and loaded the vaults of foreign banks with gold and securities. Our loans are not an act of submission to the capitalist oligarchies, but an act of liberation."

The arms industry nationalization bill is to be forwarded to the senate tomorrow. It was expected to pass the upper house early next week.

"Measure Is Moral."

Defending the bill before the chamber, Minister of National Defense Edouard Daladier said, "the first reason for the measure is moral. We are all unanimous in the desire that should war come again it should not as in the past be the source of big profits for some while others are sacrificing their lives."

Daladier then emphasized the need for increasing France's defensive power.

"It is necessary to increase means for our defense and at the same time put an end to scandals," he said.

"We hope that our example will be followed and that we will thereby put the world on the road toward reduction of armaments which is an indispensable step toward collective security."

Daladier assured the chamber, however, that there will be no reduction of French forces without an international agreement that all other powers will act accordingly.

The government will not take over control of all industries producing war materials immediately. The process of applying government supervision will be gradual and in many cases plants turning out war products may not be affected except in case of emergency.

Spain Crushes Army Revolt at Morocco Post

By the United Press.

Madrid (Saturday), July 18.—Communication between Spain and the outside world was re-established at 2:35 a. m. today after the government had confined a military uprising to Melilla, Spanish Morocco.

Fears that the revolutionary movement would spread to Peninsular Spain, where there has been widespread monarchist agitation, proved unfounded.

The ministry of communications confirmed the fact that the Melilla Garrison had revolted when it lifted a drastic censorship which for several hours severed all communication between Spain and other European countries.

The ministry explained, however, that despite the Melilla uprising "complete tranquillity" prevailed in Peninsular Spain.

Melilla is a seaport town and commercial port on the northern coast of Morocco. It is Spanish territory.

Overshadowing Melilla is a citadel with a strong garrison and extensive munitions magazines. Melilla has a population of about 15,000. The normal garrison is 1,000 men.

Minister of Communications De Los Rios stated that although complete tranquillity reigns in peninsular Spain, the government adopted precautions upon receipt of news of the Melilla uprising.

The uprising was led, it was announced officially, by Lieut. Col. Elitella of the Melilla Garrison and the forces under his command.

The minister of industry was present at a press interview called at the ministry of communications after the news of the Melilla uprising was received.

The general in charge of the Melilla Garrison submitted (presumably to the rebels), it was announced.

Gen. Gomez Morato, commander of Spanish troops in Morocco, left Ceuta for Melilla as soon as news of the revolt was received.

Officials were confident that the revolutionary movement would be dominated promptly.

Many Feared Dead as Quake Shatters Towns in Colombia

Tuquerres Virtually Destroyed, Shocks Leaving Thousands Homeless; Damage Is Heavy at Pasto and Nearby Villages.

By the Associated Press.

Tuquerres, Colombia, July 17.—A disastrous earthquake virtually destroyed this town today.

Thousands were homeless. The casualties, so far, were not determined, but it was feared many had perished.

Panicky inhabitants crowded the outskirts of the town while the shocks continued. The main shock, lasting two minutes, was felt at noon.

Communications were interrupted.

Reports from a small hamlet near the city of Tuquerres said a huge dust cloud was seen over Tuquerres.

The Department of Narino is located in the Andes table lands approximately 100 miles northeast of Quito, Ecuador.

Pasto is the capital of the department, which has about 28,000 inhabitants.

Pasto is located at the foot of a volcano by the same name. Tuquerres, a city of about 8,500 persons, lies near another volcano. Both peaks are more than 13,000 feet high.

Glass Charges Discrimination In Government

Present System Is the Type Patrick Henry Fought, Senator Asserts.

By the Associated Press.

Ashland, Va., July 17.—Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), Virginia, said "we now have a system of government of privilege and discrimination" in an extemporaneous speech late today at the Patrick Henry celebration here.

Looking out upon several thousand persons gathered on the Randolph-Macon College campus, he continued by saying that this was such a government as Henry denounced in the House of Burgesses when he made his brief speech that "it was not proper to take money of taxpayers of Virginia and appropriate it to pay off mortgages that had been made by thriftless and unwise individuals."

"That is just what we are doing in this country today. * * * The Government's nose is in all sorts of business now."

If Patrick Henry were living, said the veteran Senator as he warmed up to his subject, "he would not cure one evil with a multitude of other evils.

"When the Democratic Party in convention assembled declared against high tariff and promised to abolish or modify it, it did not mean that he would institute another system that would rob 56,000,000 people out of both pockets at the same time.

"What did Democrats proclaim from every stump throughout the length and breadth of the land?"

McCarl Visions Thrifty Regime If Landon Wins

Calls Nominee Progressive, Criticizes the President by Innuendo.

By the Associated Press.

Topeka, Kans., July 17.—John R. McCarl, self-announced foe of "extravagant spending," predicted after a conference with Gov. Alf M. Landon today that the Republican candidate's election would bring "the most economical Administration our country has known for many a moon."

"As President of the United States," said the former Comptroller General, "he will neither become a dictator nor view the plight of our people from such isolated and lofty eminence as to be tempted toward fantastic experiments rather than sound and practical measures."

The Nebraskan, who has just completed 15 years' service as the Federal Government's first Comptroller General, conferred with the Republican Presidential candidate for an hour and a half. Sitting at Landon's desk in the Kansas capitol, the two posed for newsreel cameramen.

McCarl came from offices he has set up in Washington since his retirement from public office June 30. He returned eastward tonight.

The man who started his public career as secretary to Senator George W. Norris, the Independent Republican from Nebraska who has declared for President Roosevelt's re-election, declined to be interviewed by newsmen after his talk with Landon. Instead he dictated a statement, stressing Landon's concern "regarding our ever-increasing expenditures and our ever-mounting public debt."

The text of McCarl's statement was:

"Gov. Landon impresses me most by his firm faith in the soundness, far-sightedness, and deep-rooted

Forum Hears 'Dictatorship' In U.S. Argued

Ickes Asserts Wealth Still Rules Country; Leftists Speak.

By Franklyn Waltman.
A Staff Correspondent.

Charlottesville, Va., July 17.—Spokesmen for the New Deal and the Republican Party tonight tilted rhetorical lances before the University of Virginia's Institute of Public Affairs over whether a dictatorship existed in this country—and both answered "yes," but with a difference of meaning.

Former Senator Hiram Bingham, (Republican), of Connecticut asserted that "today the Federal Government is trying to become a dictatorship, benevolent in intention but sure to drift into despotism and increasing interference with individual independence."

Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes a few minutes later cried back at his Republican adversary: "I challenge anyone, on the basis of the actual facts, to prove that there exists in Washington today either an actual or potential dictatorship." He went on to assert that "wealth through those who possess it, has been the real dictator of America" and "is still the dictator of America."

Cites Money Dictatorship.

Although the two speakers addressed themselves to the same topic: "Representative Government Versus Dictatorship," their presentations were not in the form of a debate. Bingham cited a number of instances which have occurred in substantiation of his thesis that the New Deal was steadily approaching a dictatorship and these Ickes took no account of in his presentation.

Ickes, on the other hand, contended that prior to March 4, 1933, the social economic and political system existing in this country was not "a government representative of the people," but was "representative of money." Anyone, he asserted, who undertook to argue that "we had a representative government under Mr. Hoover and his immediate predecessors or that we have in Washington today anything even remotely approaching a dictatorship, draws illogical conclusions from partial or distorted facts."

Despotism Charged.

But Bingham, who spoke first, made no effort to defend the pre-Roosevelt era. He confined his address to an attempt to demonstrate that the New Deal had taken the American people far adrift from their historic and traditional political moorings and that such action, if continued, would be certain to lead to "despotism."

Earlier in the day in the tradition of this institute to give an opportunity to the representatives of all political creeds to express their views, Norman Thomas and Earl Browder, Socialist and Communist Presidential candidates, respectively, addressed a large round-table audience which had to be moved to Cabell Hall to accommodate all wh

Dr. Townsend 'Takes Walk;' Ouster Asked

4 California Insurgents Take Case to Court at Cleveland.

Parley Refuses Formal Approval of Lemke; Tension Is High.

By Felix Bruner.
A Staff Correspondent.

Cleveland, Ohio, July 17.—Dr. Francis E. Townsend "took a walk" tonight from a meeting of his own dissension-torn board of directors. The founder of the old-age pension organization, which he has been ruling as a director, found himself at least temporarily thwarted as his followers struggled for power.

Meanwhile, one disgruntled group appealed to the courts for ouster of the doctor and appointment of a receiver for the Townsend organization.

Earlier, the doctor and his board of directors set at rest reports the Townsend convention meeting here might indorse the William Lemke-Charles E. Coughlin Union Party, by the simple expedient of telling the convention it would not be permitted to do so.

Another problem faced the convention when Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for President, announced he would be present to address the meeting tomorrow afternoon. Thomas, with President Roosevelt and Alf M. Landon, had been invited as a gesture to indicate the nonpartisan character of the gathering. None of them had been expected to accept. The President and Landon have declined. Thomas is expected to be given a cool reception.

Smith Storm Center.

The quarrel in the board was over the demand that it throw out of the organization Gomer Smith, of Oklahoma, who yesterday indorsed President Roosevelt in a speech to the convention. Smith is vice president of the organization.

Shortly after the board met tonight with Townsend present, Gomer Smith walked into the room. Townsend, obviously boiling, immediately walked out. He told the board he would never sit in a meeting with Smith. Townsend went to his hotel room and the board continued to meet with Smith present.

Hours later, a committee of the board emerged and went to Townsend's room. The members appeared to be hopelessly deadlocked. It was reported some of the board members were insisting as a price for the removal of Smith the removal of the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, bitter opponent of Roosevelt, with whom Gomer Smith has quarreled.

Townsend told reporters this afternoon he had informed the board Gomer Smith must resign or he would resign.

Atmosphere Tense.

The program in the convention hall was outwardly drab, but there was an atmosphere of tension. Frank A. Arbuckle, chairman of the meeting, frankly announced trouble was expected. Hundreds of husky sergeants-at-arms paced the hall and uniformed policemen guarded each entrance to the stage. But nothing developed.

Instead, a suit was filed in the local common pleas court asking for a receiver for Old-Age Revolving Pensions, Inc., the Townsend organization. In addition it asked that Dr. Townsend and the other directors be ousted, that all money in excess of $1,000,000 be accounted for, and that the books of the concern be impounded.

The suit was brought by the Rev. Alfred J. Wright, recently ousted director, and by three of the California delegates, George C. Highley, of Los Angeles; Mrs. Lottie Brown Berry, of Glendale, and Edgar P. Brown, of Los Angeles.

Rev. Smith Named.

Besides Dr. Townsend, the defendants were the Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith, the current "crown prince" of the Townsend movement and former right-hand man of Huey Long; John B. Kiefer, the Rev. Clinton Wunder, Baxter F. Rankine, Arbuckle, Gilmour Young and Nathan J. Roberts.

The suit charges each of the directors with misfeasance in office and demands return of money allegedly unlawfully spent.

"The suit is worth $1,000,000 to me," Townsend commented.

Wright was ousted from the movement about a month ago after

Trade Pact Foes Assailed by Hull; Farm Aids Cited

Secretary Says Business Also Is Benefited by Agreements.

New Bid for Power Charged to Critics

By Sidney Olson.

In an unsparing denunciation of the critics of the Administration's reciprocal trade agreements, Secretary of State Cordell Hull last night attacked his opponents as "the agricultural wrecking crew," which "boasted of their leadership during the years prior to 1933, but pushed the farmer into bankruptcy and left him there."

The statement was one of the most bluntly-worded yet made by Secretary Hull.

After evident references to George N. Peek, former AAA Administrator, and other caustic-tongued assailants of the trade agreements negotiated by the Administration, Secretary Hull stacked up an impressive array of figures to show that the program "is working well," and has been generally beneficial to the farmer as well as industry.

He said:

"The program is essentially economic, created by national necessity, and it has been so treated by more than two-thirds of the American press and by outstanding statesmen, regardless of party.

Sees Bid for Rule.

"Nevertheless, today those small, but powerful groups which foisted Smoot-Hawleyism upon the country, whose economic leadership bankrupted agriculture, are again making a bid for control.

"During political campaigns they always appear in their professional role as 'guardians and saviors' of American agriculture. The real purpose of a majority of them, however, is to retain or secure Smoot-Hawley embargo benefits for certain large industrial interests, as when the Smoot-Hawley measure was enacted in 1930."

Outlining the critics' strategy as an effort first to "discredit the present national program in the eyes of the farmer," Hull said:

"Accordingly, they make the astonishing attempt to cause American farmers to imagine that they are worse off now than they were prior to 1933 under the Smoot-Hawley policy, which had been invoked as a guaranty that it would make agriculture permanently prosperous."

Hull then listed statistics to show the present status of the farmer, using 1935 figures, as compared with his 1932 status. He said:

"They find themselves confronted with the fact that in 1935 farmers were getting 81 cents a bushel for wheat, as compared with 35 cents in 1932; 61 cents a bushel for corn as against 21 cents in 1932; 9 cents a pound for hogs as against 3 cents in 1932; 6 cents a pound for cattle as against 3 cents in 1932; 28 cents a pound for butter-fat as against 18 cents in 1932, and so on down the list of agrricultural products."

Cites Income Gain.

Asserting that the farm income of the country was two-thirds greater in 1935 than in 1932, he added:

"They desperately seek to divert the attention of the farmers from these facts and to turn the farmers against the policies being pursued in the interest of agriculture."

Following his line of argument directly, he proceeded to attack what he called the "absurd propaganda," and "misrepresentation" of the trade agreements' critics, saying that "they seek to create an impression that the operation of this act has led to a great increase in the imports in 1935 of competitive agricultural products."

He then argued that only four trade agreements were in actual operation during any part of that year.

Denies Reductions.

He asserted the trade agreements had not reduced in any way the tariffs, in effect prior to 1935, on wheat, corn, rye, oats, butter and canned beef; and recalling that exports of farm products declined in value from $1,692,900,000 in 1929 to $662,000,000 in 1932.

He concluded:

"The farmer will not forget that those who are seeking to capitalize him for their own purposes are the same persons who boasted of their leadership during the years prior to 1933, but who pushed him into bankruptcy and left him there."

HELEN CLEVENGER.

Bell-Boy Held In Hotel Killing Of Girl Student

A 27-year-old colored bell-boy in Asheville's exclusive Battery Park Hotel was taken into custody late last night for questioning as police sought a solution to the baffling mutilation and murder of Helen Clevenger, 18-year-old honor student at New York University.

He was booked as Joseph Urey. Officials, who have placed no charge against him said he would be questioned today. His arrest was the first in the slaying, which only yesterday was reviewed without a clew by a Buncombe County, N. C., coroner's jury.

Authorities in the mountain city where the blonde co-ed met her death while on a vacation, said they could hold the prisoner for 48 hours without placing a specific charge against him.

Urey was not summoned at the coroner's inquest as a witness, but, the Associated Press reported, two other bell-boys testified and said that Urey went off duty at midnight Wednesday, only an hour before the indicated time the girl was slain.

"We don't know ourselves just how this boy fits into the picture," said a detective last night.

Five Hours After Inquest.

Urey's arrest followed by five hours the decision of the coroner's jury that the young girl who sought pleasure and found death in North Carolina's Blue Ridge Mountains came to her end "at the hands of a person or persons unknown."

Reticent about their activities in the case, police intimated that the arrest of Urey may provide their first clew.

Investigation has centered around the story of a mysterious man seen outside the girl's bedroom shortly before she was slashed, then shot to death.

The mysterious slayer of blonde Helen Clevenger, 19-year-old honor student in the freshman class at New York University, remained at large and unidentified last night as authorities in Asheville, N. C., where she was mutilated and murdered said their search for the killer had reached a "dead end."

Meanwhile, Inspector Bernard Thompson, chief of detectives here, announced he had investigated a certain address on Fifth street northwest, found in the young woman's pocketbook, and had sent a confidential report to Asheville authorities by air-mail.

He refused to divulge what was in the communication, and added that whatever information was to be obtained about it at the present time must emanate from authorities in the mountain city, where the girl was killed.

The coroner's jury in Asheville late yesterday listened to the testimony of all witnesses who have been found in the case, and returned their report at almost the same time baffled detectives and police

Child in Coma Year Nears Full Health

Lynchburg, Va., July 17 (AP).—After spending almost a year in a deep coma as the result of a brain disorder, little Lucille Hartless, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Hartless, of Timber Lake road, appears to be on her way to a complete recovery, Dr. M. F. Stephens, her physician, said today.

Last September, after being given a serum for treatment of infantile paralysis, Lucille gradually lapsed into unconsciousness and did not wake up again until January 10, and then, with a severe headache.

Given various drugs to alleviate the headache and nervousness, Lucille again fell into a coma, the effects of the treatments completely depleting her system.

Dr. Stephens took over the case when another physician abandoned it, and gradually brought her back to health. When she emerged from the coma July 9, Lucille had no headache, she had gained 20 pounds and had a hearty appetite. Save for a tremor of the right arm, she seemed to be entirely well.

Dr. Stephens said he expects the tremor will gradually disappear.

Roosevelt, 3 Sons End Bay Crossing

Cape Sable, Nova Scotia, July 17 (AP).—Skipper Franklin D. Roosevelt and his three sons anchored their yacht Sewanna off Cape Sable tonight after 30 hours' continuous sailing for 125 miles across the widest part of the Bay of Fundy.

They came on a crescent course from Seal Harbor, Me.

Ahead of the President and his seagoing sons tomorrow lay the northward course along the Nova Scotian west coast.

The Executive sent a message of condolence to the family of Senator Louis Murphy (Democrat), Iowa, killed Thursday in an automobile accident in Wisconsin.

The only mishap was the ducking a sailor received when he went overboard while hoisting a launch on the destroyer Hopkins, in the Presidential escort.

Youth Is Drowned Trying Swim Suit Bought for Camp

Walter Yebens, 19, who was to have left this morning for the National Guard camp at Fort Monroe, Va., was drowned yesterday in the C & O Canal, while his companion thought the struggling swimmer was "kidding."

Yebens started out from his home, 5815 Sherrier place northwest, early in the morning with Raymond S. Miller, 14, of 1432 N street northwest. They were going berry-picking.

Yebens took with him a present his mother, Mrs. Walter J. Yebens, had just given him in anticipation of his stay at Fort Monroe. It was a new swimming suit.

About noon, the youths found themselves a short distance above Chain Bridge along the canal. Yebens decided he'd try the new swim suit before returning home, his companion said.

He plunged into the water and succeeded in crossing the canal two or three times. As he approached the bank on the last trip, however, he sank. He came to the surface again and cried for help.

Miller, watching him a few feet away on the bank, thought his friend in the water was joking and called back to him to "stop the foolishness."

Then Yebens' body went under a second time.

Dr. John W. Grady, 2305 U street northwest, a veterinarian, and a retired policeman were walking along the river side of the canal not far away and heard the cry for help.

They hurried to the spot where Yebens was last seen. Both dove into the water, but could not locate the body.

Sergt. C. C. Humphries, of harbor police, recovered the body two hours later near Chain Bridge.

'Disabled' Fishing Boat Arrives Safely in Port

Atlantic City, N. J., July 17 (AP).—A fishing sloop with 30 passengers aboard lumbered into port under its own power tonight as an anti-climax to the Coast Guard's dispatch of a rescue party in answer to a radio alarm that the M. S. Quay, II, was in distress 15 miles at sea.

Coast guardsmen found the crew working on a "conked" motor and the 30 passengers fishing as if nothing had happened.

'Micky' McDonald, 32 Others Seized in Two Gaming Raids

Edward G. ("Micky") McDonald, gambler, an attempt on whose life in October, 1934, led to the sensational "mistaken identity" murder of Allen B. Wilson, Takoma Park newspaper route carrier, was arrested by police in a downtown gaming raid last night, and detained two hours before he was released.

The raid was conducted by Lieut. John E. Fondall and Sergt. C. A. Musselman, of the First Precinct, at almost the same time members of a special police vice squad smashed in a door of a fashionable apartment in the 1700 block of K street northwest, and arrested 19 men.

McDonald, along with Carroll Peyton Nuckles, alias "Nubby," and 12 others were seized in a raid in the 900 block of Fourteenth street.

The chief witness against Albert McDermott, alias John (Slim) Dunn, Albert Sutton and Ernest Wellington Meyers, all of whom are serving life terms for trying to kill him, gave his occupation as a broker when police arrested him yesterday.

He refused to talk. Nuckles, who said he was a mechanic, also remained silent.

McDonald gave his address as Takoma Park, Md., where Wilson was slain October 23, 1934, as he was about to deliver a morning newspaper. Nuckles gave no address.

All the prisoners from the Fourteenth street raid were released because there was insufficient evidence against them. Police confiscated a number of alleged racing slips and several telephones.

As they approached the "hideaway," which is on the second floor of the Fourteenth street address,

Kitten Smothers Month-Old Infant

Dundalk, Md., July 17 (AP).—A pet black kitten smothered a month-old infant to death today.

The baby boy, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Joseph Nauton, was found suffocated in his crib early today. The kitten was lying directly on his face.

Mrs. Nauton told police the crib was covered with a mosquito netting. Only this flimsy material was between the child and the kitten.

The baby, born prematurely, had been kept in a hospital incubator until early this week.

Nauton, a railroad fireman, said Dr. Louis N. Tollin told him the baby had been smothered. He was not at home at the time. Coroner Fred Young gave a verdict of accidental death.

Strike Mob Closes Newspaper; Owners Seek Truce to Reopen

By the Associated Press.

Wooster, Ohio, July 17.—Ernest Harrison, editor of the Press, a weekly newspaper at nearby Rittman, said tonight he and Glenn Oyster, business manager and joint owner of the paper with Harrison, would proceed with a "peaceful plan" toward gaining entrance to their plant, closed by a group of men earlier in the day.

Oyster said the group, numbering about 15, entered the office this afternoon and threatened to break up the plant unless he closed it immediately. He acceded to their demand, he said, and the men immediately began to picket the premises.

Harrison, who said he was out to lunch when the men entered, attributed the disturbance to a front-page editorial published yesterday in the Press. The editorial, he said, issued "a general call" to the community and workers of the Ohio Boxwood Co. to say "we want to go back to work" in an effort to end a strike now in its sixth week.

Harrison said the union went on strike at Ohio Boxwood with a demand for a 10-cent an hour increase in wages, a week's vacation with pay and company recognition of the union.

He said no effort would be made to enter the newspaper plant while it was being picketed.

U. S. Aid Is Sped As Some Cities Set Heat Marks

Death Toll on Decline; Corn Prices Rise on Chicago Market.

By William V. Nessly.

Desolated, despairing sections of the drought area suffered through another withering day yesterday, saw more of their people die under the burning sun, watched their all-important crops slowly shrivel, and heard of relief steps being rushed by officials here.

Some portions of the stricken States were blessed with cooler weather, and the death toll was not as heavy as in preceding days. More than 100 deaths, however, brought the heat wave's toll to 4,400 lives.

All-time hot records were set in a number of places, among them Norfolk, Nebr., with 115 degrees; Sioux Falls, S. Dak., 110, and Newton, Kans., 110. States with several points recording 100 degrees or higher included Illinois, Minnesota, Oklahoma, Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri and South Dakota.

Heat to Continue.

Continued aridity and blistering heat will continue, the Weather Bureau forecast, except that showers and cooling weather were in sight for the northern part of the stricken Central States.

Other developments, as compiled here and as reported from the Midwest by the Associated Press, gave an even more ominous tinge to the picture.

Millions of bushels were cut from the expected corn crop by the continued lack of moisture. Charles D. Reed, Federal meteorologist for Iowa, estimated that the daily loss now is 10,000,000 bushels.

Corn prices shot up the full four cents permitted in one day on the Chicago Board of Trade, despite heavy profit taking. July corn closed at 92¾-⅞, the highest quotation in more than a year. Wheat was lower than in the previous session.

Buying Plans Completed.

Officials here completed plans for buying 2,000,000 bushels of wheat in the Pacific Northwest for relief distribution as flour. The extreme Northwest area has been contending with a surplus and only a few months ago the Government participated in an export subsidy program to reduce the oversupply.

Shipment of 108 carloads of food into Missouri for relief use was another step in the Federal Government's efforts to combat human distress.

Previously, 844 carloads of food and feed had been shipped to the destitute in 14 other States. Canned beef, flour, fresh and dried peas, prunes and evaporated milk were among the products sent to Missouri.

The Agriculture Department's drought committee designated 38 more counties in four States as emergency areas, bringing to 490, in 15 States, the number of counties now so designated. Counties in Arkansas, Missouri, South Carolina and South Dakota were given the designation yesterday.

Cattle Purchases.

The Government's program of purchasing cattle, for which no feed is available, was ready to be put into effect Monday at Chicago, St. Paul and Sioux City if the "dumping" of cattle is actually made necessary by that time. The meat will be processed for relief purposes.

Buying of 1,000,000 acres in North Dakota and 3,000,000 acres in other States was included in a program announced by the Resettlement Administration. The land will be converted to other uses. The cost to the Government was placed at about $13,749,000.

As pastures of dairy cattle dried up, new increases in milk prices were revealed. Omaha was notified of an increase from 10 to 11 cents a quart, and a similar boost was put into effect at Kankakee, Ill.

At Pierre, S. Dak., after obtaining a first-hand picture of the grim drought situation in that section, Resettlement Administrator Tugwell took additional steps for the relief of hard-pressed farmers. He ordered his agency to supply feed to farmers in need of it, and allotted $350,000 for human subsistence.

Scene of Desolation.

"A scene of desolation, of economic tragedy and human suffering" was Tugwell's description of that portion of the country he had visited. Every agency for extending relief will be in operation by Monday, he said, revealing, also, that he is considering loans to farmers for moving their foundation herds of livestock to new pastures.

The suffering he encountered is more acute than that of the 1934 drought, he declared. Towns are experiencing critical water shortages and loans will be provided for the drilling of public wells.

Meanwhile, as the drought became more and more serious, officials here were looking to the possibility of their being forced to seek means of subsidizing food products of which there may be an insufficient supply.

Mastin G. White, Agriculture Department solicitor, pointed out to the Associated Press that the original AAA act provided for both contraction or expansion of production, whichever might be needed to give agricultural income parity with industrial income.

End to Authority.

However, the Supreme Court decision invalidating AAA put an end to that authority. In the soil conservation act, passed as a substitute, there is a provision for "re-establishment, at as rapid a rate as the Secretary of Agriculture determines to be practicable and in the general public interest, of the ratio between the purchasing power of the net income per person on farms and that of the income per person not on farms that prevailed during the five-year period August 1909-July 1914."

Officials held this clause would permit subsidizing of expansion of production of such a product as corn, by dropping it from the soil-depletion list of grains, where it now is placed, or by designating it along with sorghums, legumes and other crops for which farm benefit payments would be made.

Browder's Mild Speech Points Out Communist, New Deal Similarity; Backs Roosevelt.

By Franklyn Waltman

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., July 17.—One of the most interesting political addresses made in this country in recent weeks was that delivered today by Earl Browder, Communist candidate for President, before a large audience of intellectuals and Virginia aristocracy at the University of Virginia's Institute of Public Affairs.

WALTMAN.

It was interesting for at least three reasons. One was the mildness of its content. Another was Comrade Browder's demonstration of the similarity between the present aims of the American Communist Party and the New Deal. Finally, it was interesting because of the virtually open advocacy of the re-election of President Roosevelt by his Communist opponent.

And as significant as these things were interesting was the studied and strained effort of Comrade Browder to clothe communism in a robe of middle-class American respectability by associating it—not with socialism, but with democracy—not with force and violence, but with the American Constitution.

He made no effort to hide what is his apparent goal. Like many observers of the American political scene, Comrade Browder sees not many years distant—perhaps in the next four—the rise of a strong national Farmer-Labor Party in this country. He appears determined to be a part of the leadership of that party when it comes and he is wooing the present Farmer-Laborites with every power at his command—and is refraining from doing anything which might frighten away the American farmer and laborer who conceives of communism as bloody revolutions carried on by bewhiskered and booted dictators.

All of which is to assert that this 45-year-old Kansan, whose family lineage in this country dates back to the American Revolution, is the smartest leader the American Communists have had in their 15 years of existence. Already in the short period of a year he has attained almost the full measure of respectability enjoyed by Norman Thomas, the Socialist leader and Presidential candidate, who appeared with Comrade Browder on today's program.

Comrade Browder is a wild-eyed, panting red in neither speech nor appearance. There was nothing incongruous about him as he stood at the lectern in Cabell Hall. Slight of build, neatly dressed with a close-cropped, dark mustache and wavy black hair, Communist Browder might have been any one of a dozen of the university's faculty. Nor is he given to oratorical flourishes or shouting. He speaks in a quiet voice. His background is that of a boy who started to work in industry at an early age, obtained a degree in law and has worked as an accountant.

Perhaps there is no direct connection, but listening to Comrade Browder talk recalled the Seventh World Communist Party Congress held in Moscow almost a year ago—attended by Mr. Browder—when the keynoter of that meeting, George Dimitroff, adjured the party stalwarts: "Exert your efforts with cunning."

And it is also interesting to recall, in view of the attitude which Comrade Browder now takes, that one of the speeches of Keynoter Dimitroff was interpreted in the magazine Time as implying "that the Communist Party may support Franklin Roosevelt in the next election because his defeat might enable forces now opposing United States communism to give it a body blow."

The Communist Presidential candidate certainly gave all the assistance he consistently could to President Roosevelt in this speech. He praised the President by faintly damning him and launched out in a scathing attack on Gov. Alf M. Landon, resorting to unsubstantiated accusations to brand him as a reactionary. He also turned his fire on the Lemke third party movement, labeling it as financed by the supporters of Gov. Landon in an effort to split the progessive vote.

Indeed, the Browder speech was pitched in the same tone as those which the New Dealers make, except the latter are more denunciatory of "economic royalists" and the money power. Indeed, any New Dealer could have made this speech—including the recitation, with several omissions, of the Communist platform—except for two paragraphs mildly belaboring the President as prone to retreat in face of reactionary attacks and as being too indecisive to be relied on by Progressives. Even that was excused on the ground that the Progressives fail to rally to the President's support.

Not a word was uttered by Comrade Browder in behalf of public ownership of even public utilities. Nor did he advocate the expropriation of land, except insofar as his platform proposed the Government operating closed factories to create employment and guaranteeing farmers and tenants possession of the land they till—which might be a description of the Bankhead Farm Tenancy bill, supported by the Administration.

It is surprising how many of the proposals contained in this year's mild Communist platform have been enacted into law under the New Deal or have been proposed in the form of bills in Congress by Democrats and Republicans, or are being carried out by executive order.

"A point of decisive importance," asserted Comrade Browder, "is that this program can be achieved under the present capitalist order."

Thus, he argued, the issue projected by the Communists is not Socialism vs. Capitalism but Democracy vs. Fascism, progress vs. reaction. In other words, he conceded, the issue is exactly what most Democratic and Republican orators assert it is. But that was too much for Norman Thomas. He asserted that "Fascism is a stage of capitalist disintegration not yet reached in America" and that to be loyal to the Socialist cause the issue must be "Capitalism vs. Socialism." But this, said Comrade Browder, is the slogan of the reactionaries, designed to confuse the situation.

But, said he, "the program which the Communist Party proposes and carries to the American people is one which by fighting for liberty will pave the way for socialism." In other words, the present Communist program is for "immediate needs." It might be termed an opening wedge.

Despite the similarities in the Communist platform and the New Deal, Comrade Browder asserted that "there isn't an ounce of socialism in the Administration at Washington." But, then, he denies he is preaching socialism this year.

"Exert your efforts by cunning," commanded Keynoter Dimitroff.

We wonder if there is a meaning in all this?

Women Scout Drought Peril Of High Prices

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 17.—Revised menus will be the answer of American women to possible higher food prices, Mrs. Wilbur Fribley, president of the Housewives League of America, declared today.

"The women have been following the drought news closely and will be inclined to accept more philosophically than they did two years ago any additions to the family dinner costs which may be necessary," she said.

"This drought has been so widespread that the women are fully acquainted with its possible implications to their tables."

Few Increases Yet.

Mrs. Fribley said her organization—a clearing house for several consumer groups—had not received reports yet of any decided increases in foodstuffs, except milk.

"But we have been getting word of small but gradual rises in prices for some time," she said.

"I believe that the women learned a lot from their experience during the last drought. They know that if one product is high they can probably substitute for it another which is more reasonable in price.

Doesn't Expect Complaint.

"At any rate, our organization does not anticipate any such general complaint over advances this year—if the drought does bring them on—as was the case before.

"We know that many producers have suffered heavy losses and that we, the consumers, must bear our share. The newspaper and other publicity sources have so fully described the probable effects of this drought that the intelligent women of the country know better than to condemn any justifiable increases in food lines which have been hard hit.

"The rest of the family will have to do its share, of course—by accepting the substitutes with good grace."

Locarno Meeting May Open July 23

London, July 17 (AP).—Authoritative sources predicted tonight a conference of Locarno powers, aimed at re-creating European security, would start in London probably July 23.

Great Britain, it was stated, was awaiting replies from France and Belgium as to Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden's sugestion that the three-power parley be held in London instead of Brussels to pave the way for a later five-power or possibly all-European conference to aim at a European security pact.

The three-power parley will be concerned primarily with arrangements for the later conference.

Suggested holding of the preliminary caucus in London was interpreted in diplomatic circles as a concession to Adolf Hitler, whose rearmament of the Rhineland precipitated the Locarno crisis.

Such a concession, it was thought, might make it easier for the German chancellor to provide an expected gesture of conciliation and answer the British questionnaire on his "intentions."

Princess Is Loser In Throne Battle

Manila, July 17 (AP).—The Moro princess, Dayang Dayang, planned tonight to sail for Manila without acknowledging the elevation of Rajah Muda to the Sultanate of Sulu over her opposition.

Rajah Muda, brother of the late Sultan Jamalu'l Kiram and asserted descendant of the Prophet Mohammed, was crowned Sultan of the Moros earlier in the day at Maibun, Jolo, to end a long controversy over the succession.

Princess Dayang, adopted daughter of the old Sultan, acted as Sultana after his death and once was reported as desirous of permanently ascending the Sulu throne.

While the datus (chieftains) elected Rajah Muda the princess remained away from the proceedings.

Muda's followers celebrated with prayers and feasting. When they made arrangements to pay him formal homage tomorrow, the princess began packing her effects for the trip to the Philippine capital.

U. S. Will Expel The New Deal, Says Hamilton

G. O. P. Chairman Claims Farley Cannot Pick More Than 6 States.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, July 17.—Chairman John D. M. Hamilton of the Republican National Committee told more than 1,000 party workers tonight "the New Deal is on the way out in this country and on the way out fast."

The assertion followed his statement to a group of Massachusetts Republican editors that the fall election would turn out to be either a landslide for the Republican Presidential nominee, Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, or a contest so close the outcome would not be known for several days after the balloting.

"I am not fooling with Jim Farley when I say that he would have a hard time picking six States today," Hamilton told the editors.

Hamilton's two addresses concluded a four-day speaking trip into the six New England States. He said that New England would vote solidly Landon, and New York State would vote Republican by a margin of from 350,000 to 500,000.

Cites Farley Question.

He repeated a question he said the Democratic National Committee chairman, James A. Farley, asked at Devils Lake, N. Dak., two months ago. Farley's question was: "Has anybody who is listening to this speech ever heard of a man or woman being asked whether he or she is a Democrat or a Republican before getting the dole or the emergency job?"

Hamilton then read two documents which he said came from the office of Leslie A. Miller, Democratic Governor of Wyoming. One, Hamilton said, was a letter telling an applicant for a position of non-technical foreman in the Civilian Conservation Corps last year to fill out an application blank headed "application for political appointment."

Questions on this blank, Hamilton continued, included:

"How long have you been a registered Democrat?"

"What service have you given the Democratic Party?"

"Did you contribute to the Democratic campaign fund?"

The last question, Hamilton said, "is followed by a dollar sign which obviously asks 'how much?'"

"If this were an isolated instance," Hamilton declared, "I would not cite it."

To Meet Smith.

Boston, July 17 (U.P.).—Chairman John D. M. Hamilton of the Republican National Committee, intimated tonight that he planned to confer with Alfred E. Smith, of New York, in an effort to win the backing of the former Democratic Governor for the Landon-Knox ticket.

patriotism of our people, and by his equally firm belief in the wisdom and the practicability of our form of Government. As President of the United States he will neither become a dictator nor view the plight of our people from such isolated and lofty eminence as to be tempted toward fantastic experiments rather than sound and practical measures.

"He impresses one as being sanely progressive, intent upon moving constantly forward, but always on a safe and sound basis—evolution, not revolution—and rehabilitation before reform.

"He is deply concerned, as are all who have given the matter consideration, regarding our ever-increasing expenditures and our ever-mounting public debt. There is a marked difference, of course, between expenditures for purposes, public or private, as authorized by law, and the costs of administering our Government, our overhead. The purposes and volume of the former are for fixing by the Congress from time to time, with appropriations accordingly, and as to these a President is supposed to have but persuasive influence, but as to the latter he actually possesses such wide authority as to make this a fertile field for savings.

"The Governor possesses such a keen sense of responsibility for a public trust that undoubtedly his full influence will be exerted for curtailment of appropriations to amounts reasonably necessary for legitimate undertakings by the Federal Government, and for total elimination of appropriations for impracticable or foolish ventures—but with respect to costs of administration or government overhead, I venture a prophecy that his will be the most economical Administration our coutnry has experienced for many a moon—and in striking contrast with the extravagances now so prevalent.

"It is a matter of serious importance, in my judgment, that our people be afforded every opportunity to become fully acquainted with Gov. Landon."

Landon's talk with McCarl was one of two important conferences during the day. Over the luncheon table in the executive mansion, the Kansas Governor discussed campaign plans with Wayland Brooks, Republican nominee for Governor of Illinois, and George Harding, Illinois national committeeman.

Prior to the conference both Brooks and Harding predicted that Illinois would be in the Republican column in November.

Among those who called to pay their respects were William J. McWilliams, of Larchmont, N. Y., and Albert J. McCarthy, of New York City.

Revolt Suspect In Puerto Rico Denies Charge

Nationalist Chief Blames Clash on Attempt to Deny Freedom.

By the Associated Press.

San Juan, Puerto Rico, July 17.—Pedro Albizu Campos, leader of the Puerto Rican Nationalist Party who is on trial for conspiracy to overthrow the United States administration by force, declared today the party was not guilty of conspiracy to revolt.

Albizu Campos asserted neither he nor any of the seven other Nationalists accused with him had committed overt acts, and charged that incidents of violence between Nationalists and police were due to attempts to suppress the islanders' freedom.

He read to the jury extracts from the Nationalist Party program, under which military intervention by the United States in Puerto Rico would be ended and a constitutional convention would be called to proclaim the island a republic as soon as the Nationalists rallied a majority of the voters to their cause.

A witness testified that Albizu Campos once said Puerto Rican authorities "plan to kill all Nationalists."

The witness, Angel Nunez Prieto, said Albizu made the statement at the graves of four Nationalists who were killed by police last October.

He quoted the Harvard-educated Nationalist Party president as saying the four were heroes who had "fallen in line of duty."

Albizu, with hand upraised, asked the throng at the funeral to pledge with him that the deaths of the four would not go unavenged, the witness stated.

Nunez also testified Albizu charged the deaths constituted "a Yankee crime" and that they were ordered by Col. E. Francis Riggs, chief of insular police, who was assassinated in February.

Other witnesses declared Albizu had told the citizens of Mayanguez, where President Roosevelt landed two years ago, that they were imbeciles for receiving him "with flowers instead of bullets," and that he stated in 1932, "If the governor orders police to kill Nationalists, Nationalists will kill the governor."

Townsend Ouster Asked

he had made statements displeasing to Townsend before the House Investigating Committee. He was removed under the rule enunciated by Townsend yesterday:

"They can say what they please, but if they don't agree with me, they go out."

Smith had criticized Father Coughlin and Gerald Smith and had indorsed President Roosevelt. Townsend is for Lemke and proposes to campaign for him. He would not be averse to the convention declaring for Lemke, but there are so many political candidates among its leaders, men who believe that such an indorsement would be fatal to their ambitions, that the order went out that there would be no indorsements. In spite of some strong criticisms of the Administration by Coughlin and others, there is also considerable Roosevelt sentiment, a situation very displeasing to the doctor.

The "order" from the board of directors telling the 10,000 delegates they would not be permitted to express themselves politically was read twice during the session by Arbuckle. The statement "reemphasized the fact that this convention is nonpartisan in all its political activities." It stated that "the chair rules that inasmuch as this is not a political convention any resolution having to do with indorsement of any political party shall be out of order at all times."

The statement was greeted with the same loud cheers that have followed every utterance by any speaker, on any subject, since the convention opened. There is no possible way for an observer to gauge the sentiment of the crowd, which invariably agrees with loud whoops and handclapping with everything.

Only one feeble attempt was made to protest the order. A delegate arose in the middle of the hall and said he had a resolution. Arbuckle gaveled him down and the convention proceeded with what was termed its "children's day" program. One after another, youthful speakers in their teens arose and told of the benefits to youth that would result from paying everybody over 60 the sum of $200 a month.

The youngsters were followed by a woman speaker, who made the startling statement that 10,000,000 mothers in America are wondering whether their sons are the unknown soldier. Mrs. Townsend, a pleasant little old lady, was introduced and photographed with a great bunch of flowers.

A telegram signed by Stephen Early, assistant secretary to President Roosevelt, was read. It explained that the President could not accept the invitation extended yesterday to address the convention because he was away from Washington. The telegram was greeted with mild "boos."

"Gov. Alf M. Landon, the Republican Presidential nominee wired that he would be unable to make any address until after his notification ceremonies July 23.

Nathan S. Roberts, Southern district manager, momentarily broke the "no politics" rule by rebuking Father Coughlin for calling President Roosevelt a "liar, double-crosser and betrayer."

There also showed up in Cleveland today the cofounder of the movement, Robert E. Clements, who was ousted by Townsend under the "if-they-don't-agree-with-me" rule. Testimony in the Bell hearings revealed he was given some $75,000 of Townsendites' money when he left.

"I told Dr. Townsend when I got out that if I saw that the movement was being prostituted by self-seekers and political job hunters I would make it known to the rank and file," he said. "That this is the situation is now quite evident. The Gerald Smiths, Frank Arbuckles, Sheridan Downeys, Gomer Smiths, Clinton Wunders and others are the men who are doing it."

Clements also volunteered the opinion that "the movement will never get anywhere with Dr. Townsend at the head of it."

"Dr. Townsend always has wanted to exercise dictatorial, Hitleristic power," he said. "He sees himself as a man of all wisdom, and wants to be the dominant power in the Government. I think there already has been a deal made to use fusion, directly or indirectly, with the Union Party, to elect Landon."

He declared the doctor is always persuaded by the last man he talks to. He indicated that at present Gerald Smith is the last man who has been in conversation with him.

"Townsend doesn't even understand the principles of his own plan," he said.

He said the present board of directors is a "joke," that only nine board members are active, although there are supposed to be 15, and that six of the nine are on the Townsend pay roll.

War Veterans Hold Ceremony At Arlington

Unknown Soldier Honored by Wreath; Group to Dedicate Memorial.

While members of the famed Second Division looked on, Capt. Louis Cukela, of the United States Marine Corps, stationed at Quantico and the holder of two Congressional Medals of Honor, yesterday morning placed a wreath on the tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

The simple ceremony in Arlington National Cemetery was the only formality scheduled on yesterday's program of the eighteenth annual reunion of the Second Division, which got under way Thursday and which will close tonight.

The veterans, gathered here 4,000 strong, from several foreign countries as well as from all sections of the United States, have spent most of their time in "get-togethers."

Last night the various units gathered for informal dinners at the Willard Hotel, convention headquarters. Later they were joined in the hotel's ballroom by their families for what the official program called a "general get-together." The Army Band provided entertainment.

Will Dedicate Monument.

Today's events include the dedicating of a monument on the Ellipse, a brief business meeting and a banquet.

Officers will be elected at the business session which will begin at 9:30 a. m. A report on funds needed to publish a history of the division prepared by Maj. Gen. Preston Brown, United States Army, retired, will be made. Gen. Brown at one time was chief of staff of the division.

At 2 o'clock the veterans will gather on the Ellipse to dedicate a monument to their 4,200 World War dead, with Maj. James G. Harbord, a commander of the division, making the address. Gen. Harbord at one time was also chief of staff of the American Expeditionary Force and exactly 18 years ago today commanded the regiments of the Second Division as they turned back the huge German offensive at Soissons, a battle which marked the beginning of the German general retreat.

The dedication ceremony, scheduled to begin at 2 p. m., will include an airplane salute, a salute of 21 guns by the Sixteenth Field Artillery, honors to the three division commanders, music by the United States Army and Marine Bands, and the massing of colors of all regiments which fought overseas with the Second.

Commanders Attending.

Only two of the three commanders are expected to attend: Maj. Gen. John A. Jejeune, present superintendent of Virginia Military Institute, and Gen. Harbord. The third, Maj. Gen. Omar Bundy, has been ill at Walter Reed Hospital.

The three branches of military service which fought with the Second Division—the Army, Navy and Marine Corps—will be represented. Maj. Frank E. Mason, of New York, president of the Second Division Association, will preside.

Dr. Charles W. Tegge, president of the local branch of the association, was head of the committee in charge of the general get-together for the veterans and their families last night.

The three-day convention, one of the largest the division has ever had, will close tonight with a banquet at the Willard. Next year's meeting place, to be chosen this morning, probably will be Pittsburgh.

The program follows:

1:30—Music—Army and Marine Bands, alternating.
2:00—Announcement.
2:01—Music, United States Marine Band.
2:05—Massing of Colors—Music by Army Band.
2:09—Airplane salute.
2:10—Honors to the three commanding generals, Second Division, A. E. F., Maj. Gen. Omar Bundy, Maj. Gen. James G. Harbord, Maj. Gen. John A. Lejeune—U. S. Army Band, U. S. Marine Band.
2:14—Placing flowers on monument—Gold Star Mothers, Sons and Daughters of Second Division veterans' music by United States Army Band.
2:19—Presentation of chaplain.
2:20—Invocation.
2:22—Introduction of Maj. Gen. Harbord.
2:23—Address by Maj. Gen. Harbord.
2:41—Music—Army Band.
2:44—Music—Marine Band.
2:47—Benediction.
2:49—Salute—Battery of Sixteenth Field Artillery, to Second Division A. E. F. dead.
2:53—Taps—Musician, Marine Band.

Strikers Battle RCA Workers; 12 Are Injured

By the Associated Press.

Camden, N. J., July 17.—Bitter feeling between strikers and workmen at the RCA Manufacturing Co. plant flared here late today as street rioting overwhelmed police for an hour.

About a dozen persons were injured, including three policemen. Unconfirmed reports placed the injured as high as 30. Nine were arrested. Buses carrying workers were stoned and milling thousands were spread over an area of five square blocks. Police were equipped with tear gas bombs, but did not use them.

Tension was heightened as Supreme Court Justice Frank T. Lloyd earlier in the day held court as a committing magistrate and demanded an aggregate of $523,000 bail for the release of 101 persons seized in an outbreak yesterday.

Justice Lloyd released 22. He held eight in bail as high as $10,000 each for the grand jury, and made a blanket order for $5,000 bail each for 93 others whose cases he will hear next Tuesday.

Hundreds of workers were virtual prisoners in the plant during the fighting today. Police Chief Arthur Colsey announced an hour after the usual closing time that all had left by seldom-used exits while the crowds were gathered at other gates.

The plant closed for the usual week-end holiday at 4 p. m.

Music from amplifiers erected by the company rose above the din of the milling throngs near the plant. Martial airs were on the program.

The first sharp clash occurred when workmen leaving the plant boarded a bus. Strike sympathizers besieged it. Flying building bricks and stones shattered the windows. A police cordon forced open a path and the vehicle edged its way through thousands of strike sympathizers. Other thousands, as spectators, jammed the streets and increased the difficulties of the police.

10,000 Demand Danzig Be Poland's Territory

Warsaw, July 17 (AP).—Ten thousand Poles, including many Socialist workmen, met in a mass demonstration tonight and adopted a resolution proclaiming Poland's rights to the free city of Danzig.

Placards carried by the crowd were drastic. They read: "Danzig was and must be Polish;" "Germans—keep your hands off Danzig!" "Down with Beck's (foreign minister Joseph Beck) pro-German policy."

the garrison at Melilla, Spanish Morocco, spread today.

Despite a drastic censorship from Spain, Paris morning newspapers published dispatches reporting the spread of disorders to Cadiz, Santander and Ceuta.

Messages obstensibly from private sources in Madrid said that all summer vacations for police had been cancelled and that men already on vacation had been recalled.

The last cryptic message to pass the censorship imposed by the Red Popular Front government headed by Premier Manuel Azana hinted that rightist or monarchist elements had plunged the country into disorder.

It declared the government was master of the situation, would maintain the republic and had faith in the loyalty of the army.

After the censorship was clamped down communications authorities here expressed opinion that "political developments" were the cause. All telephonic communication with the Spanish capital was cut abruptly.

Earlier in the day messages from Madrid said that "a roundup of rightist elements" was in progress in Spain. But the messages were meager and their transmission was interrupted by censor.

This week, following decision of Monarchists and Rightist deputies to leave the Chamber of Deputies permanently, the Spanish Parliament was adjourned for eight days.

Quit After Slaying.

The Monarchists quit Parliament after the assassination of Jose Calvo Sotelo, Monarchist leader.

The last message from Spain known to have passed the Madrid censor said:

"The government is master of the situation. It intends to maintain republican institutions and has faith in the loyalty of the army."

It was reported that telephonic communications from the interior of Spain to Madrid also were severed. Officials in Paris were mystified further when it was found that it was impossible to tune in on Spanish radio broadcasting stations. Normally the Spanish stations broadcast until 3 a. m.

Disorders Current.

Revolution, bloodshed and disorders have been periodic in Spain since the overthrow of King Alphonso XIII in April, 1931, when the government of the nation was turned over to new leaders, representing the will of the majority of the Spanish people.

Disorders and crippling strikes have been prevalent since the election last February of the Leftist government, a regime which went further toward the communistic form of government than any up to that time in Castille.

An unofficial estimate of the number of dead within the last five months of trouble was between 200 and 300, with perhaps 1,000 wounded.

Fresh tension was created early this week by the assassination of Jose Calvo Sotelo, monarchist leader.

Beating through the streets of Madrid and Seville and Cordoba and Barcelona and a dozen other seething Spanish cities, civil guards and other authorities rounded up hundreds of Fascists and confiscated their ammunition and weapons. There were, at this time, rumors of a military coupe and a possible government crisis.

Coup in 1931.

The first attempt at armed revolt against the new republic occurred in the summer of 1931. Forgetting their differences, Syndicalists, Anarchists and Communists tried to seize power in Seville, metropolis of Andalusia. The coup failed.

Early in 1932 the same groups united once more. This time they concentrated in Barcelona, capital of Catalonia, richest commercial province in Spain and seat of most of Spain's great factories. They failed again.

That summer the Monarchists, with strong rightist-Catholic powers, tried to grasp the reins of government in Madrid. The following winter a third Syndicalist-Anarchist attempt was made in Madrid, Seville and Barcelona.

Then Azana was forced out when the elections of the autumn of 1934 brought the Conservatives into power. At that time arrests were said to have numbered about 30,000.

At midnight a general strike was ordered throughout Spain and transportation tied up. Rebellion broke out in Navarre and Asturias and Bilbao. This strike also was quelled.

Unrest has grown with the passing of time, for the Monarchist movement still is strong, and those who are striving to prevent any possibility of a return of the Bourbons have taken extreme measures.

Spanish revolutions have been bloody—but less so than others throughout Europe.

King Fled in 1934.

Life moves at its leisurely pace in the remote provinces and customs have changed little. Ancient churches, for the most part, have been preserved, as have the palaces of the King, who fled to England in 1934 when the crack Civil Guards refused to follow him and joined the revolution.

The nation is widely diversified as to language, taste and political thought.

Catalonia, the industrial capital, has a language half French and half Spanish. Bilbao is the big railroad and steel town—the Pittsburgh of Spain. In these two places the workers are easily aroused.

Madrid is given to political intrigue, but it is in the heart of old Castille, where customs change little with the years. Citizens of Seville and Cordoba and the cities to the south, through Cadiz and Algeciras, rise one day in violent revolt, then spend countless months at cafe tables during siestas talking excitedly and sipping drinks.

Bell-Hop Held in Death

admitted frankly they had little on which to work.

Returning the obvious verdict, the venire said Miss Clevenger, who was only 19 years old and on a vacation from her studies in the fashionable Battery Park Hotel, had come to her death "at the hands of persons unknown."

Deliberation Brief.

The verdict was returned after brief deliberation. Fifteen witnesses, however, had testified before the jury retired. Their testimony cast little light on the crime.

Principal witness was the girl's uncle, Dr. W. L. Clevenger, professor at North Carolina State College, Raleigh, who discovered her body in her room Thursday morning.

Additional light, however, was shed to a small degree on the appearance of the mysterious man who apparently entered the hotel and strolled to the girl's room unchallenged, where he attacked her, stabbed her several times in the face with a sharp instrument, then shot her to death with a small-caliber revolver.

From the testimony the jury learned only that screams and groans had been heard at least twice during the night, and that a middle-aged, heavy-set man was standing in her doorway about 1 a. m., the time fixed in the reconstruction of the crime as the hour of her death.

A man of the same description, the jury heard, rushed through the lobby and out into an electrical storm shortly afterward.

"I saw the men run into the manager's office and hide behind a desk," said Durham Jones, colored bellboy.

"Then he went tearing through the lobby and out the door, and slammed it after him. He jumped the railing and ran down the street."

His story of the stranger tallied with that given by other witnesses, including E. B. Pittman, who occupied the room across the hall.

No one left by elevatotr the floor on which the girl's room was during the night, Robert Simpson, lift operator, testified.

The girl's body was viewed by members of the jury before the inquest. His discovery of the body was described by the girl's heartbroken uncle.

"I retired about 10:30 the night before," said he in a voice visibly shaken by emotion.

"Helen and I had returned from a day in the country with friends and we said goodnight and went to our roms. I went right to bed."

Next morning, he added, he awoke at 7:30.

"After I'd shaved I went down the hall to Helen's room. I have always been careful about entering her room without knocking, and this time, as usual, I knocked.

"When she failed to answer, I rattled the door knob. The door swung open, and I saw her body lying, half in and half out of the bathroom, with her legs doubled up under her. Her face was horribly mutilated.

"I was stunned. I turned back into the hall and saw Harry Iasch, the hotel carpenter.

"He looked in the door, and then we went to call the hotel management."

King's Rescuer Flees to Dodge Adoring Public

Ex-British Navy Stoker, Polish Salesman, Accepts Praise Modestly.

Copyright, 1936, by the United Press.

London, July 17.—Special Constable Anthony Gordon Dick, former royal navy stoker, who saved King Edward's life yesterday by knocking a revolver from an Irish assailant's hand, went to work in the country today to dodge a worshiping public.

Dick, who has sold polish for a living for the last 14 years, devoted the day to selling polish far from London's laudatory throngs. As he left his home this morning a woman ran up, lifted his hand to her lips, and exclaimed:

"God bless you, my boy, for saving the King."

Dick, 36, is the father of three daughters, 8, 5 and 2.

"I think it is marvelous," his wife said this morning. "If I had done a thing like that I would have been tickled skinny."

But before Dick went to work he revealed that after yesterday's royal procession he got a "terrible rowing" from his wife for getting home late from his duties as a special constable.

Dick too was worried because he was late for work as head salesman for an old firm of polish manufacturers. He was late because he spent so much time booking George Andrew McMahon, whose real name is Jerome Bannigan, at the police station after the Irishman had brandished a loaded revolver at His Majesty.

"When I got home the wife wanted to know what I had been up to," Dick said. "I pushed forward an evening paper and told her I had knocked the revolver from the man's hand. She did not believe me at first. I changed into mufti and drove back to business. I told my pals there, but I was not able to stand so many of their questions so I left."

Dick is 5 feet 8 inches and weighs 170 pounds. He is red faced and wears a small toothbrush moustache.

Will Be Commended.

Sir Percy Laurie, assistant commissioner at Scotland Yard, telephoned to the chief of the special "J" division of constabulary to which Dick is attached and asked him to thank the hero "for his promptitude and bravery in tackling an armed man."

Dick, it was said, will be suitably commended.

Dick himself was "fed up" with the "hero stuff." His wife said he would remain modest despite hero worship. There was no sleep in the Dick household last night, what with reporters and neighbors ringing the doorbell and clamoring for information and extending congratulations. There is no telephone at the Dick home.

Mrs. Dick had little time for McMahon.

"I think he is crackers," she said.

Witnesses Called.

Scotland Yard, inquiring deep into King Edward's narrow escape from assassination and determined to increase precautions to protect British royalty, today called upon all witnesses of yesterday's attempt to come forward and aid in prosecution of the assailant.

Unwilling to accept the popular verdict branding McMahon a crank, crackpot or drunkard, the police kept him at Brixton Prison while they continued a thorough investigation.

The King, who returned to London from his Fort Belvedere country residence where he spent the night, read state papers, received his ministers and read telegrams of congratulation and felicitation from all parts of hte world.

Shaw Removed by Gov. Nice; Allen Appointed to Park Post

Republican Leader Named to Park Commissionership, Montgomery County's Best-Paid Political Job at $3,600 Salary.

Montgomery County's richest "political plum," the park commissionership has been taken from the Democrats and given to a Republican by Gov. Harry W. Nice of Maryland.

Shaw retains his post as member of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission at an annual salary of $600 a year, but loses the $3,600 plus expenses paid the park commissioner.

The two men were notified yesterday of the dismissal and appointment. It came as a shock to Democratic ranks since the post was believed safely Democratic until next year.

Shaw, who has been one of the leaders of the Democratic organization in the county, was appointed by the late Gov. Albert C. Ritchie while the State and county still were under Democratic control. He resigned as president of the board of county commissioners to accept the appointment.

Allen, who is a resident of Chevy Chase, was appointed a member of the park and planning commission shortly after Gov. Nice took office. He is expected to assume his new post immediately.

Fines of $1 and costs of $2.50 were levied against 75 dog owners who failed to provide their dogs with license tags by Police Court Judge Harold C. Smith yesterday.

The judge ordered that 20 persons who did not respond to their summonses to appear before the court be arrested and forced to post $7.50 collateral for their appearance in court.

The defendants were among 150 persons who have been arrested in the strongest drive against tag law violators in the history of the county. The maximum fine is $25 with an alternative of 30 days in jail for failure to secure licenses for dogs after April 1, the deadline.

News of the wholesale arrests spread through the county and the clerks were kept busy yesterday writing dog licenses. Those who reached the license clerks before the police served warrants on them escaped with the cost of the tags as their only penalty. Those who had been summoned by police had to pay their collateral before they could purchase tags. Long lines of applicants were reported at the several issuing offices yesterday.

The drive is to continue until all dogs in the county have licenses, police said. Special details of police have been assigned to the work. Impounding of the dogs has not been started yet.

Exercises dedicating the new Garrett Park Playground near the railroad station will be held this afternoon. Tennis matches, horseshoe pitching and other athletic contests will begin the celebration at 2 p. m.

Exercises will be at 4 p. m., featured by addresses of Lacy Shaw and Richard F. Green, members of the Maryland Park and Planning Commission; Irving C. Root, chief engineer of the commission; Maj. L. L. Dye, former mayor of Garrett Park and by Mayor Roy P. Moore, who will preside. A musical program will be provided by the Potomac Band.

A community picnic will be held at 5 p. m. The exercises are under auspices of the Garrett Park Citizens Association.

Sen. Murphy's Rites Monday In Dubuque, Ia.

Eight Colleagues Named to Attend Funeral of Auto Victim.

Four Senators and four Representatives yesterday were named official Representatives from Congress at the funeral Monday of Senator Louis Murphy in Dubuque, Iowa.

All four Representatives, appointed by Kenneth Romney, the House sergeant-at-arms, at the request of Speaker Bankhead, are members of the Iowa Democratic Congressional delegation. They are Representatives Fred Biermann, F. C. Gilchrist, Guy M. Gillette and O. D. Wearin.

Senator Murphy, who was killed Thursday in an automobile accident in Wisconsin, will be buried in his native city of Dubuque after funeral services there Monday in the cathedral. His body was returned to his home yesterday while his companions in the motor crash were recovering at the hospital in Chippewa Falls, Wis.

Mrs. Murphy, the Senator's wife, suffered a chest injury and lacerations. The other passengers in the car, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Woodward, of Dubuque, are recovering from cuts and bruises.

Cousin to Name Spy Suspect's Lawyer Today

Navy Says Records Fail to Show Farnsworth Air-Crash Injury.

The lawyer who will defend former Lieut. Comdr. John S. Farnsworth on charges of having betrayed naval secrets to the Japanese probably will be named today, Ward Farnsworth, Chicago real estate broker and cousin of the accused man, announced last night.

Meanwhile the Associated Press reported that Frederick W. Farnsworth, of Cincinnati, father of the prisoner, would come here personally to direct his son's defense.

Despite the fact that the Navy Department yesterday stated that its records showed no such accident, Farnsworth's cousin, who arrived in this city Thursday afternoon, reiterated that the probable line of defense will be that the accused naval officer has been irresponsible ever since he was knocked unconscious in a naval airplane crash in Pensacola Bay in 1926—one year before he was court-martialed out of the Navy.

The only naval accident for which Farnsworth received medical attention, according to Navy records, occurred at 10 a. m., on June 17, 1920, when the plane Farnsworth was piloting collided with another. The officer, called then a brilliant naval aviator, sustained a fractured left knee, left rib injuries and cuts and bruises over the left eyelid.

It would have been impossible for Farnsworth to have been in any airplane accident in which he suffered injuries sufficiently serious to make him irresponsible without the Navy recording it, department officials declared.

Informed of the Navy Department's statement, the accused man's cousing retorted:

"That's not so. I recall reading all about the crash in the Chicago newspapers. Why only today I spoke to a friend of John's who recalled the whole business If it comes to the point, we'll prove there was such an accident."

Whether the formal naval officer, who is lodged in the infirmary of the District jail on $10,000 bail, will consent to the "irresponsibility" line of defense, was uncertain last night. Farnsworth has persistently maintained his innocence, protesting that his contact with a member of the staff of the Japanese Embassy was solely with a view to getting a job as aeronautics instructor in that country.

33 Seized in Gaming Raid

the officers said they saw two men escape by the fire escape.

During the K street raid, conducted by the Vice Squad, members of which apparently knew nothing of the Fourteenth street raid conducted by First Precinct men, 4 of the 19 prisoners were booked on charges of setting up a gaming table.

The alleged gambling house, located in a fourth-floor apartment of a mansion and a landmark of the city, converted into an apartment house, was the most elaborate gaming place raided here within a year, Lieut. George Little, of the vice squad, said.

The vice squad members were forced to smash a glass panel in the door to gain entrance. Overstuffed chairs and lounges were provided for the players' comfort. Electric fans and radios also were supplied for comfort and for race results and news broadcasts.

Fifteen persons in the place at the time of the raid were taken to headquarters but later released as witnesses. Those booked by police gave their names as John W. Kenny, 25, 2500 block of Fourteenth street northwest; William C. Ryan, 36, 1700 block of K street northwest; Howard R. Seal, 37, 1700 block of K street northwest, and George Carmelis, 39, 1300 block of Connecticut avenue, booked for investigation.

Kenny and Ryan were released in $1,500 bond to appear at a hearing before Commissioner Needham C. Turnage on Monday. The others had not been released late yesterday.

Although the establishment was not very large, Lieut. Little said, the play was of a higher class than in most gambling places.

Official Shared HammRansom, Witness Holds

Former Police Chief of St. Paul Accused at Trial in Kidnaping.

By the Associated Press.

St. Paul, July 17.—Byron Bolton, a Government witness in the trial of John Peifer on kidnap charges, this afternoon testified that $25,000 of the $100,000 ransom paid for the release of William Hamm, jr., St. Paul brewer, was for Thomas Brown, former St. Paul chief of police, and $10,000 for Piefer.

A few moments earlier, chief of police, Clinton Hackert, suspended Brown, who has been head of the police auto theft division. Hackert acted on orders of Public Safety Commissioner Gus Barfus, who referred to "rumors of association of the police department with St. Paul kidnapings" and "unfavorable mention of" Brown in the trial.

Brown was a member of the police detail which pursued and slew Homer Van Meter, Dillinger gangster, here August 23, 1934.

"I am not presuming to determine the truth or falseness of any statements that have been made," Barfus said. "I believe, however, that if the integrity of any police officer is questioned he should be removed from duty until he has been proven either guilty or innocent."

Bolton, a few hours earlier, testified that $25,000 was for a St. Paul police officer whose name he did not mention at the time, for "tipping off" the Barker-Karpis gang as to the activities of the police during the period Hamm, kidnaped June 15, 1933, was held for ransom in a Bensenville, Ill., "hideout."

Each of the gangsters who participated in the actual kidnaping, Bolton testified, was to receive $7,800, and $500 was for Edmund C. Bartholmey, former Bensenville, Ill., postmaster, in whose home Hamm was held.

Bartholmey, Charles Fitzgerald, Alvin Karpis and Bolton all have pleaded guilty and are awaiting sentence as conspirators in the kidnaping.

The Pinch Of Sanctions.

The fact that the Italian people so joyously celebrated the lifting of the League's economic sanctions is of itself proof that those sanctions hurt while they were in force. Premier Mussolini would have had no special cause to praise the resistant powers of the people and acclaim the nation's "great victory on the economic front" if the method of coercion applied by the League had not been effective. If further evidence on that score is needed, we have the testimony of unprejudiced travelers who bring back reports of the inconveniences, hardships and deprivations resulting from a serious shortage of fuel and foodstuffs.

Removal of the League boycott will not restore Italy's impaired buying power. The heavy inroads made into her gold reserves will remain a serious handicap. Under the close censorship imposed by Rome it is impossible to state how great the gold losses have been, but League authorities place them at more than 2,000,000,000 lire during the first six and one-half months of sanctions. While the drain on reserves would have been heavy in any case, because of the demands of the war, sanctions greatly increased it by cutting down Italian exports to League countries and depriving Italy of means of paying for essential imports.

The loss of tourist revenues, due both to the war and to the pressure of collective action, also has increased the difficulties of offsetting Italy's heavily unfavorable merchandise balance, although the Italians take some cold comfort from the fact that their imports have been cut more severely than their exports.

However, in the absence of official data throwing a clear light on Italy's financial and economic position, the reaction of the Italian nation to the removal of sanctions is a more trustworthy indication of what they have accomplished than statistical guesses as to the cost in terms of foreign trade or gold reserves. There is very good reason to believe that sanctions were lifted not so much because the pressure was ineffective, as because it was so effective as to threaten Italy's social stability.

In The Hindenburg's Wake.

The spark which found its way into the hydrogen bag of the first balloon to attempt a Channel crossing in the early 1800s is said to have delayed the advance of aviation by 50 years. So horrible were the deaths of the French aeronauts that emphasis on flying was temporarily lifted. Similarly, in this country, the disasters which overtook the Shenandoah, the Akron and the Macon put an effective damper on lighter-than-air enthusiasm.

But time, and the success of the Germans in crossing the South Atlantic more than 500 times with the Graf Zeppelin while lately maintaining an almost regular schedule across the more difficult North Atlantic with the Hindenburg, have reestablished confidence. Slowly interest in dirigibles is reviving.

At least two national commissions had recommended another try at them before the Navy last year requested seven of the Nation's outstanding engineers to study their possibilities. In a report submitted last January this Durand board concluded that lighter-than-air craft were feasible, provided the greatest care was used in their operation. Now a seconding voice is heard from the business advisory council for the Department of Commerce, which makes the specific proposal that two dirigibles be built for transatlantic service.

It is pointed out that the 1936 merchant marine act created a commission with authority over lighter-than-air vessels. Through this authority, Federal subsidies might be allowed private builders, particularly if they co-operate, as recommended, with the Navy in the development of new craft. The costs—not only in dollars—of the early American experiments in this field were undoubtedly high; but, as a German expert has pointed out, the United States built three dirigibles, lost them and gave up; Germany, on the other hand, built scores, lost many of them during the war and at last learned how to manage the delicate craft.

With their knowledge generally available, dirigibles should now be practical for any nation to undertake. With the United States holding a virtual monopoly on the world's supply of helium, the gas that greatly enhances lighter-than-air safety, it is particularly appropriate that plans for renewed participation in this field should now be formulating.

Dr. Butler's Criticisms.

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, who returned this week from a meeting of the European Committee of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, denounces the tariff and foreign trade planks of the Republican platform as "economic nationalism of the narrowest and most dangerous sort." Viewed with complete detachment, his charge is only too well-founded.

For instance, the requested repeal of the reciprocal trade agreement law and restoration of the principle of the flexible tariff would be tantamount to abandonment of all efforts to lower tariff barriers and would probably insure continued stagnation in foreign trade, with consequent continuation of unemployment caused by that condition. The pledge to use "every effort" to collect war debts totaling $12,000,000,000 is likewise little short of absurd in view of the insuperable political and economic obstacles in the way of accomplishment.

The outright platform declaration against membership in the League of Nations or the World Court and the promise to remain free from entangling foreign alliances provides further evidence of the trend away from an enlightened policy of "international consultation and co-operation to promote the peace of the world and to establish the rule of law in order to displace the rule of force." As a veteran Republican, Dr. Butler effectively points out that the party has in its platform renounced the teachings of a long line of its own Presidents and Secretaries of State.

Admitting the force of such criticisms, it should nevertheless be noted that Dr. Butler has ignored some very important facts which go far toward explaining, and in part excusing, the reactionary trend which he deplores. It is far from easy for the United States to strengthen commercial and political ties with nations whose energies are concentrated upon arming for defense or future aggression and which are, for that reason, resolved to achieve greater economic self-sufficiency. It is also now a debatable question whether this country could in the immediate future make much headway against the world-wide trend toward economic nationalism and the growth of militarism by becoming more closely associated with international agencies for furthering world peace. It is, moreover, unfortunately doubtful whether we can go very far in our endeavors to remove trade barriers in a world of depreciated currencies, subsidized exports, and regulated exchanges.

Dr. Butler may, with reason, deplore the willingness of the Republican Party to run with the tide in a world so desperately in need of reform. But, in justice to his fellow countrymen, he must admit that they are not entirely to blame for the change of attitude. The spectacle of a turbulent, suspicious Europe, and the blows dealt to the League's prestige by the aggressive actions of its own members, have inevitably strengthened American opposition to foreign commitments of all sorts. While this disposition to withdraw from outside contacts unfortunately tends only to aggravate the existing instability of international relations, it is a natural reaction in view of all the circumstances.

The growth of isolationist sentiment, furthermore, is not a partisan manifestation, as is evident from a reading of the Democratic Party platform. Despite indorsement of the Administration's reciprocal tariff policies, the Democrats are as emphatic as the Republicans in demanding protection against the products of "cheap foreign labor" and goods subsidized by foreign governments. Their vague declaration in favor of a "good neighbor" policy carries no pledge of participation in international organizations. On the contrary, it strongly suggests an intention to remain aloof from such alliances.

The Democrats even failed to take up the opportunity afforded them by the Republican charge that the present Administration has made no effort to negotiate debt settlements. Instead of defending themselves by explaining the hopelessness of the task, Senator Robinson in his convention speech simply laid the blame for the situation upon the Hoover moratorium, which, he alleged, encouraged debt repudiation.

Dr. Butler as a student of world affairs ought, therefore, to make more generous allowance for the effect of external disturbances upon domestic political sentiment. There is no reason to be downcast or unduly alarmed by declarations in favor of economic nationalism which, after all, do not commit us to any immediate or definite action. We shall not collect any war debts because the Republican platform makes childish remarks on that subject.

The Descent Of Man.

Lives there a man with soul so dead who can't remember the agonies he went through having to wear long pants before a knickerbockered jury of his peers? Painful memories they are, along with those of squeaking shoes and the compulsory escorting of pigtailed maidens. Up to now, the change to man's estate via the breeches route has been up to the judgment of fond parents. If a doting mother chose to keep her boy in shorts until he was 15 or 16, that was her privilege. Now, however, all is up—or down—for revision.

The recent convention of the International Association of Clothing Designers in Toronto carefully weighed this problem of callow youth. Deciding that it would be a minor tragedy to keep little Willie's knees exposed after he is 6 years old, the retailers have handed down an edict of long trousers for all youngsters who have counted as many as seven birthday candles. Hereafter teachers of first and second grades will find themselves confronted with a classroom of midget men. It will be quite like Eton, or even Harrow.

Except for one consideration this decision should give women in general a quiet chuckle. For to the day for shedding straw hats is now added another for donning long trousers. What now of man's contention that women are the only ones who follow, sheeplike, the dictates of fashion? Or what would be of it now, were there any likelihood that the rampageous little lambs of seven will consent?

The Constitutional Issue.

As an aftermath of the Supreme Court's decisions during the last year and a half, a strange theory relating to constitutional powers is gaining currency. The charter of 1787, it is said, was never intended to prevent the Federal Government from carrying out policies essential to the welfare of the people. From this unassailable generality, however, it is speciously argued that only misunderstanding of the true nature of the organic law brought about the downfall of the NRA, the AAA, the Guffey coal act and similar regulatory measures.

Arguments of this sort are perhaps a natural reaction to the disappointment that many citizens felt when important reform measures were invalidated. They would pass with little notice, except for the fact that they are now being given active support by high officials of the Administration. With such indorsement, they become a truly important issue.

In writing an introduction to Irving Brant's book, "Storm Over the Constitution," Secretary Wallace asserts that the founding fathers provided the Government with powers "equal to the demands created by new times and new institutions." Again a fair generality leads to the false conclusion that "the denial of power has always come, and comes now, from those who do not want power to be exercised," Mr. Wallace leaves the impression that all authority which the President may wish to exercise can be legitimately attained through the appointment of justices who will uphold the Executive's viewpoint.

The document which has served as our organic law for a century and a half certainly grants very broad powers to the National Government. Otherwise it would long ago have become obsolete. The scope of various general powers will doubtless be further extended as new situations call for broader application. In this respect, the limits of constitutional authority in some fields can never be foreseen. But this natural expansion of granted and implied powers must be carefully distinguished from proposals to extend governmental activities on the weird theory that there are properly no constitutional restrictions.

There is not the slightest warrant for the argument that any Administration should be able to obtain new powers simply by placing its own interpretation upon the organic law. If the country should ever accept that view, it would thereby sign the death warrant of our system of government. The Constitution would mean nothing if it could not be actively invoked to restrain Federal agents from any encroachment upon the liberties it guarantees.

The position recently taken by Solicitor General Stanley Reed is more thoughtful than that of Secretary Wallace. He frankly admits that emergencies do not create governmental powers, and he does not regard the general welfare clause as "a grant of plenary power." Moreover, he accepts the doctrine that the National Government can exercise only those powers delegated to it by the Constitution, and the corollary that powers not so granted are reserved exclusively to the States or the people. Yet even the Solicitor General recently told the Institute of Public Affairs that the function of the organic law is "to guide and not to curb necessary governmental processes."

A ripping reply to this sort of casual thinking now comes from the Lynchburg News, published by Senator Glass. As the News aptly says, the basic function of the Constitution "is to prevent the Government from doing that which it should not do." This irrefutable point reflects the reasoned view of all Democrats who still cling to the traditions of their party. Theirs is the traditional American attitude. Indeed, it is the only attitude under which a constitution can operate to safeguard the liberties of the people against the excesses of temporary majorities.

A constitution that could be automatically adjusted to give each Administration all powers it might deem "necessary" would be no constitution at all. That simple fact should be apparent to everyone. It is permissible, of course, to argue against any constitutional limitations upon the representatives of the people. But if that is what the critics of the Supreme Court have in mind, they should be candid enough to say so. And they should be fair enough to recognize that such nullification of constitutional restraints would give us a system of government entirely different from that under which the United States has advanced to its present status.

One of Georgia's candidates for Governor says it isn't possible to reduce taxes and at the same time maintain adequate State services. He'll never get anywhere as a politician; he knows too much about arithmetic.

The Pendulum's Swing?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With reference to "Comrade" Stickney's mention that 405 banks have been liquidated, that our silver mines are more profitable, that last week's failures were the lowest, that United States income is now 15 per cent higher, and the like, let me say that the pendulum has swung back. It was bound to swing back some in spite of all this Federal foolishness of planned scarcity, attempted bureaucratic regimentation and wasteful corruption. In every other country recovery has proceeded much farther and much faster than in the United States, where it should have led all the rest, and would have led all the rest but for the wanton willful destruction of food, of clothing, and even of the self-respect of one person after another by a lot of this crazy, alien New Dealism.

Isn't it about time, since the New Deal closed all the banks three years ago, that its partisan, politically appointed referees should have about squeezed out "all the juice" of the liquidated 405 banks? That its use of the taxpayers' money to boost the price of silver to store up in our vaults should make silver mining profitable, and especially since we are on a paper-money basis? And that such resulting unearned big profits by favorites naturally would increase incomes of not only the favorites but of the Government? J. D. MASON.

"With What Little Wit."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Recent events in American history are overwhelming attestation of the old saying, "with what little wit the world is governed." Then that other ancient dictum regarding the fallability of a man's foresight compared with his hindsight is worthy of our reverence. Truth is that man goes stumbling along singly and en masse, and the wisdom of the so-called intelligentsia is but a pretense.

Getting down to cases: Who could have foreseen that the repeal of the eighteenth amendment would have resulted in one of the biggest rackets that ever cursed any land? In New York last week I saw crowds of men and women drinking mint juleps at 75 cents per drink in a fashionable hotel. Talk of highwaymen and pirates! Jean Lafitte and Capt. Kidd were but amateurs contrasted with our modern buccaneers.

Had the foresight of the delegates at the Baltimore convention been in good order, chances are 1,000 to 1 that with Champ Clark in the White House this Nation would have kept out of the World War. Similarly, in 1932, if some millions of voters could have envisaged a national debt of $35,000,000,000 and a vital thrust at our democratic system, maybe we would have been spared the New Deal. But why bring that up! E. B. S.

Defends The PVA Proposal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your criticisms of the Potomac Valley Authority bill as proposed by Representative Rankin are not given, in my opinion, in the light of a newspaper interested in the welfare and progress of the readers and the city that support it. Your reaction to a plan that will benefit the people of Washington by lower electric rates, cheaper transportation (and resultingly lower coal costs) and the recreational facilities that a large lake of clear, pure water could give, is to attack it.

And not only do you attack the bill, but you make erroneous statements about it. You say that it would cost "millions of dollars to make the river navigable" with the purpose of diverting public opinion from a project that would be operated with the same efficiency and lack of expense to residents as our water supply system. You do not mention that abundant power can be produced from the flow of water of the Potomac, or the probability that the cost of the locks to raise vessels from one level to the next will be the only expense directly attributable to navigation.

Nor do you mention that the entire plant will pay for itself within a reasonable period from the sale of its electricity to residents of Washington at a lower rate than they are now paying. You detest "boondoggling" and berate the Administration for providing useless work and then use unfair means to defeat a worthwhile project. You call it an "ill conceived program."

"Ill conceived," I'll admit, from the viewpoint of a stockholder in the local electric company that has fought at every opportunity the reduction of electric rates and which would be forced to sell a little closer to cost with a legitimate competitor in the field. "Ill conceived" certainly for railroads that haul coal and coal companies that sell the coal that now produces our electricity.

On the other hand, I am equally sure that it is not an "ill conceived program" for the great numbers that would benefit by paying less for their electricity, by saving in the cost of the transportation of their coal, and by having a decent place to swim and boat and fish that we so badly need.

You cannot consider yourself a public benefactor, the role of a newspaper, when you take up sides against our construction of our own power plant.

The Song Of The Bus.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: May I invite you to list to the song of the venerable Rapid Transit bus. Every day, every hour, every schedule, the siren strains of those buses echo down street and avenue, soar over park and housetop, swing through doors and windows. You have heard it—this awful transmission gear music of the antiquated trucks still used on some of the old W. R. T. routes. It is especially trying in the evening, when a worn-out clerk craves rest and quiet. But get on this bus.

A monster in the worn metal housing on the floor beside the driver begins a low moan with the pull of the bus away from the curb, for all the world like some sick Frankensteinish robot coming out of the ether. As traffic thins, the driver accelerates, the pitch rises, the song changes. It is now a chorus of hungry calves bawling for their mothers. This barytone off-key chorus builds until a crunching clack from the metal broadcasting studio ahead of you tells you that the driver has made the shift out of low gear.

This exquisitely torturous note may be maintained for a few seconds to a minute, depending on the load in the bus and whether the wheezy vehicle is climbing or descending an incline. Eventually the driver crashes into high gear, and 50 passengers relax.

But only until the next stop, when the whole unnerving cantata is repeated. Those ten thousand hogs get caught in their gates at least 30 times a trip on my bus. Can't something be done about their racket? What is this thing called silent second? Do they ever grease those transmissions? And how ancient does a bus have to be to have gained enough honors to retire?

Political Pseudonyms.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a political campaign such as we are now entering the words of a person who has not the backbone to permit the use of his name, but must hide behind a nom de plume, should have no weight with the reading public. Hence I challenge "Aristotle," of Alexandria, to come out from behind a mask.

Voters' Common Sense.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I hope you will allow me to express my convictions regarding the momentous political question that confronts the country.

If President Roosevelt is re-elected (which does not seem possible after the astonishing object lessons he has given the country in reckless spending and wildcat schemes for gaining votes), he will have to thank the voters who can not or do not think for themselves.

This unfortunate class—unfortunate for themselves and the country—may hold the balance of power, although the destiny of the Nation should really be decided by those who fully realize the menace that confronts us.

However, there is ample evidence that the people are taking more interest in the affairs of the Nation and the doings of the Administration than has been the case since the Civil War if not the Revolution itself. This is well, for it indicates that the average voter, at least, will study both sides of the political question and then use his own judgment in voting for or against a centralized Government, as proposed by the New Deal Party.

I have faith in the common sense of a vast majority of the voters in the coming election that will determine the future destiny of this favored land of liberty. I believe they will see the plain handwriting on the wall; that they can not fail to read between the lines of New Deal promises and pussyfooting propaganda, and vote for their own best interests and the permanent welfare of the country.

I believe this because "self preservation is the first law of nature" and of individuals.

Fair Play For The Rich.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is unfortunate that the New Deal program should, in common with that of the regular Communist party and so many other organizations, stir up class feeling by blaming the "predatory rich" for our economic ills.

It is a mistake to assume that there is an economic conflict between labor and capital. The actual issue is between labor and capital on the one side and entrenched monopoly on the other. The way to right our economic wrongs is, therefore, to repeal those laws which provide special privileges and monopolies to individuals or corporations. Our Government is one of laws, not of men, and it is wrong to incite class against class.

An interesting episode which occurred in Congress some 43 years ago provides a good illustration of this distinction. Congressman Tom L. Johnson, of Ohio, a prosperous steel rail manufacturer and a Jeffersonian Democrat, advocated free trade with all the world. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, sought to discredit Johnson by charging him with being a monopolist who was profiting by the protective tariff. Johnson immediately responded in these words: "The gentleman from Pennsylvania is right. I am a monopolist and I am ready at all times to take advantage of the bad laws which you Republicans put on the statute books. But in the interest of my constituents and the general public I am doing and shall do all in my power to repeal such laws."

Johnson was the type of "predatory rich" whom the New Deal people are persecuting at this time, when a more sane program would be to remove the special privileges with which no fault is found. The rich are quite as much entitled to fair play as are the poor. It is as wrong to steal from a rich man as from a poor man.

Gov. Landon's Chances.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Gov. Landon hasn't a chance in the world. There are too many factors against him, viz: President Roosevelt's popularity; the recent pick-up in business (apparent, if not real); the present strong, close organization of the Democratic Party; the demoralization of the Republican Party, and the people's disgust with that party; Gov. Landon's youth, and unknown qualities; and finally, destiny, which always gives a man enough rope with which to hang himself.

The Post Impressionist

Plain Living, Hot Thinking.

Post Office, Saturday.

It was the other night when the thermometer——

Well never mind. To our thinking, thermometric registrations are merely elaborate devices invented by man to make himself, both winter and summer, feel a little worse than need be.

The point is that it was a sweltering night and that there were only three of us at the table when the newsboy came in—Jarvis, the Doctor and your obedient columnist. Your obedient columnist has lived in several attitudes, Jarvis in a lot, and the Dctor says he has missed none of them.

The newsboy had, probably, never lived anywhere except Washington. However, he was hawking the bulldog edition of The Post, so Jarvis welcomed him.

"All about the big fire!" cried the newsboy.

"That's what I want to read about," remarked Jarvis.

And he turned, so soon as the newsboy had retired a decent distance, to the weather reports.

"Why is it," Jarvis demanded, "that the official forecaster always says 'Fair and warmer'?"

We replied that the official forecaster didn't always say "Fair and warmer." We declared—though nobody believed us—that we could remember a time when he said "Fair and cooler"—and that, furthermore, it turned out to be a correct prophecy.

"Oh!" Jarvis snorted. "Why is it the forecaster always says 'Fair and warmer' when there's an increasing attack of Washington summer?"

"Probably force of habit," we then ventured. "He's too enervated to think of anything else."

"He probably says it," said the more literal minded Doctor, "because it is a fact."

"But," Jarvis objected, "that's precisely what it isn't: it isn't true. For instance, he says it tonight about tomorrow—just after saying that the mercury touched 96 this afternoon. Ninety-six: is that 'warm?' You know it isn't. You know it's hot. So why, when he thinks the temperature will reach a hundred tomorrow, does he say the weather will be 'warmer'? He means 'hotter.'"

We began: "Once in Algiers, during the summer of 1928——"

Jarvis interrupted us: "I was in Arabia in the summer of 1932——"

"Last year I lived on the equator the entire year."

"Then you ought to be ashamed of yourself," Jarvis insisted. "That's no place to live."

"It is a far better summer place than this place," the Doctor declared, "because, although it is tropical, the aborigines order their lives to suit it, whereas here in Washington, although the summers are semi-tropical, we refuse to admit it—and we die. . ."

The Doctor produced a 50-cent piece, looked at his companions and, when neither companion showed the slightest sign of producing anything, rapped on the table.

"We Washingtonians," continued the Doctor—he being the only one of the trio who was born here—"are too loyal about our climate, particularly our summer climate."

"Eh? . . . Yes, waiter—quite correct."

"In Washington," pursued the Doctor, "the month of July is, at the best of times, sub-tropical—at the worst, tropical, or damned hot. But the Smithsonian Institution is located in Washington, the headquarters of the National Geographic Society are located in Washington: we Washingtonians feel that, as a matter of local pride, we must stand up for anything they say—live up to it. And they say that Washington is located in the temperate zone—and so we consider ourselves in duty bound to eat and dress and work and, when we can find the money for it, drink according to the accepted standards for summers in the temperate zone.

"It's splendid," said the Doctor; "it's heroic. But it isn't common sense. And I have yet to hear," said the Doctor, "one word of appreciation concerning it from either the National Geographic Institution or the Smithsonian Society . . .

"Thank you, waiter . . ."

"We ought," said the Doctor, "to have awnings over the sidewalks, bamboo curtains at the doorways, and siestas every day. We should work—if at all—only from 5 until high noon, whereafter we should repose until evening, and dine late. Congress, if sitting, should wear shorts, and I do not believe that it would be unbecoming for the Cabinet to meet, if it then met at Washington, in the White House swimming pool . . ."

* * *

"What's that, waiter?" inquired the Doctor . . . "Oh, yes. These gentlemen are not my guests; they are my friends. So they will pay for themselves."

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

Willie Upshaw.

Willie Upshaw, the old Georgia prohibitionist and hell-fire preacher, has been in our town on his way from somewhere to somewhere else, and we have been having words. He was annoyed about an essay your correspondent wrote out of Cleveland at convention time. That made it mutual, for your correspondent had been annoyed at Mr. Upshaw for years and years because he was Willie Upshaw the Prohibitionist.

The experience goes to show that there is no wisdom in meeting a man and finding out what makes him tick if you enjoy a dislike for him. We were sore then, but now we aren't, and it may not be as much fun that way.

Here was an old-style, down-South, camp-meeting hallelujah-shouter who did his worst to keep prohibition on the books through all those years and here was a true-believing, practical wet, sitting down to drink tap-water with him and coming away tolerant. Tap-water never seemed to affect the drys that way in prohibition time.

Your correspondent never thought the day would come when he would give up on old Will. For years, when people would sit around hotel rooms on the road nominating their favorite political aversions for the All-Time, All-American team your correspondent always put Will in for captain and often made him stick in the face of such competition as Tom Heflin, William G. McAdoo and Bishop Cannon. He seemed to have everything—a tower of strength as we say in the football stories—but now your correspondent would not guarantee to put him on the scrub.

Old Will was telling about these crutches of his and why he has to wear them. It seems that because he is such an expert crutch-walker, touching them lightly and nimbly to the ground, some people have thought the crutches were part of a costume. He had a row in Washington once when he was in Congress because a man said he ran lightly up the aisle ignoring the crutches. It burned him to be accused of ignoring the crutches merely because he had mastered the trick of getting the most out of them with the least effort.

The fact is that Will fell into a wagon box one day when he was working on the farm at the age of 18 and injured his spinal cord so badly that he spent the next seven years on his back. He was just fixing to go to college at the time, and the upshot of it was that he couldn't enter college until he was 31 years old. However, that put him into the same class with the late John Roach Straton, and that was something, because Will thinks the Late Rev. Straton was a great American and he regards the association as a great privilege. He does for a fact, but, then, you have to understand that he believes in prohibition, too, even now.

Someone once remarked that Mr. Upshaw was the legitimate successor of William Jennings Bryan, not necessarily as to political leadership but as to prohibition and religion, and Willie has accepted the nomination. That is why he is still trouping, crippled and poor, at the age of 69.

* * * *

He got a little better as the years went by, graduating from a wheel chair and a plaster cast which encased his body like poured concrete to the crutches and a smaller cast, made of whalebone, which he wears to this day. In this condition, Mr. Upshaw goes slamming around the United States hollering up religion and hollering down the devil and communism, whiskey and cigarettes wherever his booking takes him.

He thinks of communism as atheism, and while some of us may think he is wasting a lot of fury on a windmill, old Will believes communism, or atheism, is just around the corner, waving its slimy tentacles or hopping like a buzzard, or whatever it is that atheism does.

He thinks it would be nice if he could get endowed just enough to take care of his wife, who is sick and bedridden, and relieve him of uncertainty regarding his own keep so that he could fight with both hands free. As it is, he has to use one hand to pick up a little cash here and there and, doing this one-handed, he doesn't pick up much.

* * * *

Sometimes he gets just a few dollars for a preaching, but he always gives them all his stuff, regardless of the gate and without counting the house. In this matter of picking up cash money of course Mr. Upshaw hardly qualifies as Mr. Bryan's successor, because Mr. Bryan generally did very well for Mr. Bryan. Feeling so tolerant on tap-water and siting there on pleasant terms with the man who used to be his All-Time, All-America captain, your correspondent asked Mr. Upshaw why, as long as he was in town, he didn't go down and call on Earl Browder, the Communist candidate for President. It was only a few minutes away and he might want to meet the devil and get his angle on things.

But tap-water doesn't affect Mr. Upshaw that way.

"Oh, no," he said, slowly. "Not a Communist. I can't go that atheism."

The Once Over

The Parents' Summer Camp.

Have you contributed to the fund to send parents to the seashore and country yet during the hot months? Have you done your part to take mother and father away from it all?

* * * *

The first carload of happy parents left for the seaside yesterday, and your heart would have warmed to their wild shouts and cries as they gathered at the station and made a mad rush for the best seats on the train. Come across now, and help a parent get a little rest from the kids!

* * * *

The wide appeal of the Parents' Summer Camp idea is illustrated by the following letters:

Dear Parents' Summer Camp Editor: Inclosed find my little mite ($768,435.95) for the Parents' Summer Camp. Newspapers are always raising funds to send the kiddies to the shore or country, but this is the first time any newspaper has thought of the parents. In most cases they are in much greater need of a rest than the children.

A DEMOCRAT.

(Note—The reference to the $768,435.95 as a little mite shows the writer is not only a Democrat, but a New Dealer.—Ed.)

* * * *

Dear Camp Editor: All this talk about the wan, white faces of the kiddies in the hot months is the bunk. You ought to see the faces of their parents in a warm spell. They look like paper pie plates left out in the rain. The children get some opportunity to get out in the fresh air and play, but where can pop and mom play ball or use a scooter?

I am sending you my check for $50, and certainly hope some tired, sad-eyed mother will get a chance to dig in the sand, climb a tree, make a fire without matches and have as much fun as the children get.

FOUNTAIN WADER.

Dear P. S. C. E.: I am a father of four children. The oldest is 13 years. They all have mechanical twists, and are always taking things apart or building gadgets. Two of them are in soap box derbys. Even my den is full of wheels, tires and loose planks. Unless I get away to he woods soon something will break inside of my head. I think I shall——.

Thomas was sharp in his criticism of both President Roosevelt and Gov. Alf M. Landon. Even though he asserted that President Roosevelt was "more progressive, alert to the human problems of his time than Mr. Landon or the men and forces who made that highly synthetic candidate and can break him," he accused the President of indecisiveness and "pussyfooting."

Thomas deplored the "extraordinary hate" which "many of our so-called respectable classes, now vehement supporters of Mr. Landon, openly express for Mr. Roosevelt." He suggested as a possible reason for this hate on the part of some—identified by him as Al Smith and Father Charles E. Coughlin and their followers—the refusal of the President to intervene on behalf of the Catholic Church in Mexico.

Browder, declaring that the issue of the years as seen by the Communists, was not "socialism versus capitalism"—as projected by Thomas—but "democracy or fascism, progress or reaction." He criticized Thomas for preaching socialism before the country was ready for it, but Thomas retored he was skeptical of protestations in behalf of democracy and that fascism was "a stage of capitalist disintegration not yet reached in America, or as yet consciously desired by important political leaders."

Says Workers Are "Lulled."

He declared Browder was making the mistake of crying "Wolf! Wolf!" too soon, and thus was lulling asleep the vigilance of the workers against fascism, so that when it came, they would not be disturbed by the cries of actual alarm.

Although sharply assailing Landon, Browder was gentle with the President. The defeat of the Landon-Knox ticket, he asserted, should be the real objective of the progressives, and he assailed Father Coughlin and the Lemke Third Party ticket as "conceived and financed by Hearst and the Liberty League," which he said, also were supporting Landon.

"Landon and Knox are the candidates of the camp of reaction," he asserted. "They were hand-picked by William Randolph Hearst, chief exponent of Fascism in America. They are supported by the Liberty League, by Morgan, by the DuPonts, by the Rockefellers, by all the monarchs of monopoly collectively known as Wall Street. The Republican platform, behind a thin camouflage of Main Street liberalism, is the platform of reaction."

He contended that "Roosevelt stands for capitalism"—adding that his own program could be carried out under the capitalistic order—but that he President "as between reaction and democracy is striving to follow a middle-course." Thus, Browder said, "he wavers between the pressure from both sides" and it is this indecisiveness "that makes it impossible for the serious progressive forces to rely upon Roosevelt for the defeat of reaction."

Urges Farmer-Labor Party.

The hope of America, Browder held, was a nationally strong Farmer-Labor Party. If such a party had a candidate in the field this year the Communists would support it, he said. He said the Communists, even though they had their own candidate, were sympathetic with the aim of the farmer and labor groups supporting President Roosevelt; that Landon and Knox must be "defeated at all costs."

Bingham contended the New Deal theory was that "the Government is to be a magnificent provider of happiness" but he held that such a theory carried out would mean "the end of liberal representative government and the beginning of dictatorship," and that while such a program of "bountiful, humane paternalism" could be put into effect only by "a benevolent despotism," history taught that "benevolent despotisms always eventually become malevolent and bring untold suffering and misery."

He cited as evidence of the New Deal's striving toward a dictatorship its disregard of constitutional limitations; its suggestions for curbing the Supreme Court and its actions designed to bring that tribunal into disrespect; the centralization in the President's hands of power to spend huge sums; "violation of rights and liberties," as in activities of the Black committee and the cancellation of air mail contracts; "arbitrary and despotic" actions such as the dismissal of William E. Humphreys from the Federal Trade Commission, and the increasing interference and competition of the Government with private business.

Charges Court Curb.

The Connecticut Republican contended New Dealers had ready several proposals to curb the powers of the Supreme Court and that these were being held in abeyance until after the election. If President Roosevelt is re-elected, he asked, "what assurance have we that they will not be enforced?"

"The exponents of the New Deal," he said, "are constantly preaching (or were before the campaign got under way) that a popular President who is working in the interest of unfortunate citizens should not be hampered by constitutional limitations."

Bingham conended that although at heart "we still believe in representative government and we abhor dictatorships," we are impatient with the delays and the seeming inefficiency of such a process.

"So, while retaining the forms of representative government we are drifting more and more rapidly into a dictatorship," he added. "That it is benevolent in intention, that its head is a charming gentleman who sincerely wishes and hopes for the greatest happiness of the greatest number and is more than willing to try anything once—or even oftener—should not blind us to the fact that we are not developing a sturdy citizenship, we are not building for the future of a vigorous republic, we are in the grip of the most reactionary forces imaginable."

Ickes declared he did not believe that "the last word in government and social organization was written even by those great men who subscribed their names to the Constitution, even admitting that what they wrote always has been correctly interpreted."

The Cabinet officer assailed the Republicans as trying to face "conservative in Wall Street and progressive in the West," and denounced that party's platform as "a classic in American political literature for facing both ways, for artful dodging, for saying one thing and meaning another."

Moving on to his denial that a dictatorship, actual or potential, existed in Washington today, and that representative government of the people did not exist prior to the Roosevelt inaugural, Ickes declared that "the great majority of the people of the United States today lack economic freedom."

He contended the cry of "dictatorship" was raised by the rich and Tories of America and that their cries did not come until "there came in Washington a government that advanced the shocking theory that taxes ought to be assessed in proportion to ability to pay."

"If I were a betting man," he asserted, "I would be willing to wager all that I have or could borrow on the proposition that if President Roosevelt should yield to the importunate demands of William Randolph Hearst and his kind and substitute a general Federal sales tax for all income, inheritance and gift taxes, he would be acclaimed the greatest patriot in the whole calendar of American patriots.

"The liberty-loving duPonts would run the risk of drowning in their own tears of joy at such evidence of pure patriotism. The Liberty League would be disbanded overnight. If you gather that I suspect that the fervor of certain self-acclaimed patriots of this day is not unrelated to their bank accounts, I will have to admit that you are not wide of the mark."

Declaring that wealth has been and still is the "real dictator of America," Ickes contended the rich among President Roosevelt's opponents "are prepared to fight to the limit, not only to retain the power that they have but to add to that power." It is not the farmers or the workers who are shouting "dictatorship," he said. Those who raise the cry, he asserted, are those whose "pocketbook nerve—the most sensitive of all—has been touched by President Roosevelt's taxation policies."

Irishman Defies Court in British In Revolt Case

Republican, One of Six in Chains, Had Dynamite in Home, Police Say.

By the Associated Press.

Londonderry, Northern Ireland, July 17.—A heavily chained and guarded Irish republican tonight defiantly challenged the right of a British court to bring him before the bar of justice.

Hugh McAteer, jr., one of six men seized today in the Royal Ulster constabulary's ceaseless war against the revolutionary Irish republican organization, declared before the bench:

"I deny the right of the court to try me or any citizen of the Irish republic."

Sixty-eight sticks of gelignite (a gelatin dynamite), enough to blast away a city, formed the main exhibit in the short hearing for the six men.

Police recorded their names as Thomas Carlin, James Cowle, Sean Dolin, Hugh McAteer and his sons, Hugh and Daniel McAteer.

They were handcuffed and guarded by 15 armed police as they left the hearing.

The prisoners were seized by four groups of police who entered 12 houses where they said they found the explosives, coils of fuse, arms, ammunition, bomb and Irish Republican literature. It was in the McAteer home that authorities said they found the dynamite.

The Irish Republicans have advocated immediate formation of a republic not connected in any political manner with Great Britain.

Authorities in Dublin in the last few weeks have taken strict measures to curb the rising activities of the republican army in the Irish Free State.

Until today there had been no recent reports of republican agitation in northern Ireland.

The republicans propose to take both the Irish Free State and northern Ireland into the new state.

Senator Glass

Glass continued. "We would go to Washington and modify the Smoot-Hawley bill. They haven't written a single line to repeal—a single line. We will let industries continue their species of robbery and let other groups institute their species of robbery. When it comes to wage earners, clerks and stenographers, professional men, and a large class of others, 56,000,000 of them, the exaction from them is from both pockets at the same time."

Again the Virginia senator declared that Henry would "never in the world have countenanced any such legislation in behalf of privileged classes."

Launching into further speculation as to what Patrick Henry would do if alive today, the Virginia senator asked his audience if the famous orator-statesman would be "bamboozled by talk of Federal aid to the States?"

"All this Government aid talk is folly," he answered.

Speaking of the tax dollar, he said, "I contend, and I have always contended, that it would do vastly more good left in your pockets or else left in the treasury of Virginia."

Excessive Taxation.

"Virginia is a victim of excessive taxation in comparison with other States," he asserted. "Last year it paid $139,000,000 into the United States Treasury in direct taxes. It gets back a mere pittance. It paid more than 15 States west of the Mississippi combined—they got ten times as much as Virginia got.

"You are paying to aid those States west of the Mississippi.

"Some people have a notion that as soon as a dollar gets into the hands of the Government it becomes some sort of sacred species, money to be doled out by some Federal minion, piecemeal."

Amazed at Statement.

The veteran Senator said he was amazed when a "high official of the Judiciary Department" said at the University of Virginia a few days ago that the Constitution was not designed to "curb Government enterprise," but to lead the Government.

"Patrick Henry was opposed to Virginia ratifying the Constitution," he said. "His reasons went toward the proposition that it did not curb Government enterprise enough. And because of his efforts the first ten amendments were drafted. The Constitution was intended to curb Government enterprise when the Government hasn't got sense, patriotism and courage enough to curb itself and remain within constitutional limitations.

"Without the restraint that it embodies the Constitution would be a worthless piece of paper."

London, July 17 (AP).—Mrs. Rudyard Kipling, widow of the author, was reported today by Middlesex Hospital to be making good progress toward recovery from a slight illness.

Secret Service Heads Question Aid on 'Inquiry'

Agent Queried on Alleged Investigation of Steps by Hoover's Men.

By the Associated Press.

Seeking to learn whether he knew anything of reports that the Secret Service had conducted an investigation of Justice agents' activities, Secret Service chiefs subjected Grady L. Boatwright, veteran operative, to a threehour interrogation.

What he told them was not disclosed.

Boatwright, head of the St. Paul office and formerly attached to the White House detail, was the first of several operatives Chief W. H. Moran of the service and W. H. McReynolds, administrative assistant to Secretary Morgenthau, propose to question.

The Treasury said Thomas J. Callahan, head of the Chicago office, was one of those who would be questioned.

Officials emphasized that the inquiry was directed largely at subordinates of the two Secret Service field executives.

Assistant Chief Joseph Murphy in Los Angeles is expected to arrive here soon to take part in the inquiry.

First word of the incident came when Attorney General Cummings said he "suspected" there had been "ill advised" activity on the part of the Secret Service. The Secret Service high command promptly asserted that they had ordered no investigation of the justice agents and insisted that if any had taken place, it was merely individual curiosity on the part of some Secret Service men. It was said that one phase of the Secret Service inquiry was directed into the killing of a Dillinger gangster by the Justice agents under J. Edgar Hoover.

Justice Department officials have let it be known that should any Secret Service inquiry be found to have taken place, a formal apology and disciplinary action against persons implicated could be expected.

The normal duties of the two Federal detective agencies concern widely different matters. The Secret Service is charged with the suppression of counterfeiting, protection of Federal instruments and the protection of the President and his family and the President-elect.

Justice Department men are empowered to investigate a wide range of crime, including kidnaping, bank robbery, espionage, antitrust law violations and other crimes involving the breaking of Federal law.

President Pardons Lithuanian Editor

By the Associated Press.

Federal prison officials said yesterday that Joseph V. Stilson, wartime editor of a Lithunian Socialist newspaper, had been released from the Lewisburg, Pa., penitentiary with a "full and unconditional pardon" from President Roosevelt.

Stilson, as secretary of a Lithuanian society and editor of a newspaper, was convicted under wartime laws of encouraging "insubordination, disloyalty and refusal of duty" and of "obstructing and encouraging "insubordination, disloyalty and refusal of duty" and of "obstructing recruiting and enlistment."

Officials who aided in prosecuting the Lithunian approved the pardon, the officials added.

Stilson was found by officers on September 21, 1935, and served in Lewisburg from January 1, 1936, until his release Thursday. His sentence was for one year, ten months and nine days.

2 Suits Demand Vacations for WPA

New York, July 17.—Two Federal Court suits were filed today seeking to force the Government to grant vacations with pay to WPA workers.

The actions were brought by Louis Bunin, local manager of the WPA experimental theater, and Matilda Schnittman, an employe of the theater project.

Carol King, counsel for both, said thousands of WPA workers would be affected by the outcome.

Bunin's suit seeks 26-day vacations annually for all supervisory and administrative workers, in accordance with a law which he said became effective on March 14, and two and a half days a month off for those classed as temporary employes.

Miss Schnittman's complaint said the Comptroller General had ruled that WPA employes were not Federal officials or employes within the meaning of the act, and that no WPA worker of any grade could lawfully be paid except for actual services rendered.

Bridge Has 76th Suicide.

Pasadena, Calif., July 17 (AP).—A middle aged, unidentified man leaped to his death today from the Colorado Street Bridge, a graceful span that has drawn civic argument on whether it should be made "suicide proof." Police records listed him as the seventy-sixth victim since the bridge was built 28 years ago.

Marine Hero Dies

MAJ. GEN. LOGAN FELAND.

Logan Feland, War Hero, Dies In Columbus, O.

Marine General Fought in France, Nicaragua; Won Many Medals.

Maj. Gen. Logan Feland, a hero of Belleau Wood and idol of thousands of enlisted men who fought with him in France and Nicaragua, died last night in Columbus, Ohio.

The 67-year-old retired Marine officer, who commanded American land forces in Nicaragua during the 1927-1928 uprising, was decorated numerous times for valor in the World War, and spent most of his life fighting for his country, died at his home in Columbus from heart disease.

Gen. Feland was retired from active military service in 1933.

He fought in the Philippines and commanded men in Panama, Puerto Rico, Nicaragua and France. He took part in the occupation of Vera Cruz and participated in all the major engagements in which the Marines had a part.

After the war he commanded brigades in Santo Domingo and Nicaragua.

Headed Pacific Unit.

In 1930 he was placed in charge of the Department of the Pacific of the Marines and at the time of his retirement was in charge of the depot at Philadelphia.

Commanding the Fifth Regiment of the Marines in the Aisne-Marne offensive, the St. Mihiel drive, the Meuse-Argonne battles and in the Marbach sector, his war record was brilliant. Later, he led his regiment to the Rhine.

Among his decorations were six awards of the French Croix de Guerre and a membership in the French Legion of Honor. He was awarded the U. S. Navy Distinguished Service Medal for "distinguished and gallant services" and was cited six times in divisional orders for gallantry.

Other Medals.

For subsequent service in Nicargua two stars were added to his Distinguished Service Medal and he was awarded the Presidential Medal and the Medal of Merit of Nicaragua by the President of that country. He also received the ribbon with Star of Nicaragua.

Gen. Feland was born in Hopkinsville, Ky., in August, 1869. He was mustered in service in May, 1898, as captain in the Third Kentucky Infantry. One year later he was appointed first lieutenant in the Marine Corps and rose through the ranks until he became major general in 1929.

His widow survives. It was reported from Columbus that burial will be in Arlington Cemetery.

Gen. Feland was a member of the Army and Navy Club.

Dionne Seeking Permit For Hospital Concession

Toronto, July 17 (AP).—D. A. Croll, Ontario minister of public welfare and one of the Dionne quintuplets' guardians, announced today that Oliva Dionne, father of the famous children, had approached the government for permission to operate a refreshment booth opposite the quints' hospital.

"He is going to operate a stand and we are going to see that he has the necessary electrical energy for refrigeration," said Croll.

2 Planes a Day To Be Delivered To Army Corps

New Purchasing Plan Is Started by Woodring; Speed Increased.

By the Associated Press.

Sixty new speedy fighting planes will zoom into the air every month during the rest of the year under perfected War Department airplane procurement plans.

The record of two plane deliveries a day, Army Air Corps officials said yesterday, has been made possible by the smooth functioning of a new purchasing plan started by Harry H. Woodring, Assistant Secretary of War.

Before the end of the year 500 new planes will be ready for action, officials said. Plans have been made for the purchase of more than 600 planes of various types in 1937.

Facing Congressional cirticism because of the slowness and quality of the Army's aircraft, Woodring, officers said, revised buying specifications and installed a new system, after an exhaustive development and test period, designed to provide the Army with the world's finest fighting aircraft.

The planes already delivered and the two planes to be delivered each day during this year will provide the Army Air Corps with machines that will carry greater loads for longer distances at higher speeds than was dreamed of a few years ago.

Speed has been increased, officials said, to a point where the latest type planes race along at nearly 300 miles an hour.

The War Department has contracted for 849 planes under the new policy, of which 181 have been delivered. The goal is 2,400 planes, recommended by the Baker Aviation Board and the general staff.

The Air Corps' experts have already worked out preliminary plans for 1938 plane purchases and contracts are scheduled to be let by July of next year for at least 500.

Schuschnigg Takes Rest.

Vienna, July 17 (AP).—Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg departed today for Saint-Gilgen, near the Bavarian frontier, for a short vacation. Chancellery officials denied rumors he contemplated crossing the frontier to see Chancellor Adolf Hitler at Berchtesgaden.

The CAVALIER is the HEART of VIRGINIA

And the heart of The Cavalier is the Beach Club.

From the first invigorating dip in the surf . . . through the lazy hours of lounging on the beach in sun and shadow . . . through luncheon . . . tea . . . and dinner, if you like . . .

Through the evening of dancing under the stars, with the waves adding a deeper note of romance to the glamour of the music . . . you'll want to stay at the Beach Club!

Of course, The Cavalier isn't all heart . . . and beach. It's partly Country Club . . . and golf courses . . . and pine forest . . . and bridle paths . . . and tennis courts . . . and trap-shooting . . . and it's all at its best in July.

Army Wives See Ft. Myer Poloists Win

Mrs. Wainwright Has Place of Honor at Match Here.

War, Third Cavalry's Greens Meet Today in Potomac Park.

A gallery, among which were many wives and daughters of Fort Myer officers, gathered at the Potomac Park polo grounds yesterday afternoon to cheer the fort's riders on to victory in a match with the Baltimore Polo Club.

Unlike most feminine spectators at sporting events, members of yesterday's gallery kept their minds strictly on the game. Eyes glued to the field, they applauded at just the right moment and not once did their conversation switch from the technicalities of polo to the subject of clothes and domestic affairs.

The place of honor in the Fort Myer box was occupied by Mrs. Jonathan Wainwright, wife of the newly arrived commandant of the post. She wore a sports frock of green silk made with a wine red cravat, and a medium-brimmed straw hat trimmed with ribbon. Col. Wainwright watched the match from a chair on the grass.

Mrs. Reid Attends.

Nearby Mrs. C. H. Reid, wife of Capt. Reid, who is in charge of the tournament, chatted with Mrs. Sally Chamberlain. Mrs. Reid wore a sleeveless crepe dress in a raspberry shade and Mrs. Chamberlain was dressed in a beige sports frock trimmed in brown.

Gen. Leon B. Kromer, Chief of Cavalry, had taken a box, but abandoned it to watch the game with other officers, from a chair close to the field.

Capt. Miller Present.

Also present at the match were Capt. Charles Miller, publisher of the Cavalry Journal; Gen. Upton Birnie, chief of Field Artillery; Mrs. Arthur Thayer, whose husband is in command of a squadron of cavalry at Fort Myer, looking cool in a pink peppermint striped dress of silk and a broad brimmed rose hat, and Mrs. George R. Grunert, wife of Col. Grunert of the War College, whose son is No. 4 on the Fort Myer team.

Mrs. Harry Stadler, wife of Capt. Stadler, at whose home the cavalry team was entertained at a buffet supper after the match in honor of the visiting team, was also present.

Yesterday's game was the first of an intra-circuit and consolation tournament to be played at Potomac Park and Fort Myer. Today the War Department team will play the Third Cavalry Greens and the Quantico Marines will play the Sixth Field Artillery of Fort Hoyle.

Navy Arranges All of Details For Its Brides

Miss Rosalie Goodhart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Chalmers Goodhart, whose marriage to Lieut James Stratton Dietz, U. S. N., will take place this afternoon at 3 o'clock in the chapel at the United States Naval Academy in Annapolis, has discovered the Navy takes off the shoulders of its brides all responsibility for wedding arrangements.

When she and Lieut. Dietz decided on the date of their marriage, she consulted Commander William N. Thomas, chaplain of the Naval Academy, and asked as to the floral decorations of the chapel, and the music.

"We will take care of all that for you," Commander Thomas assured her. "All you have to do is come to the chapel and you can't help but be married."

White flowers will decorate the chapel. If there are none in the Academy greenhouses, the Navy provides them from outside, and the regular organist will play the wedding music as he has for countless other Navy weddings.

It is said that at the recent marriage of an Army officer and a Navy daughter, being a loyal Navy man, the organist managed to work in the theme of "Anchors Aweigh" with the Mendelssohn "Wedding March" in the recessional.

The old colored porter at the chapel, who has seen Navy brides come and go for many years, feels a personal responsibility in having the wedding move smoothly. When the bride and her attendants arrive, he closes the main entrance of the chapel and they remain in the vestibule. When the bride is ready for the ceremony to start, he goes to see that the bridegroom is ready, and finally to see that the chaplain is ready also, and, with military precision, at his signal, the wedding proceeds.

Lieut. Dietz has been on sea duty on the U. S. S. Tennessee for three years and just has recived his "j. g." which entitled him to add the black lines to the shoulders of his uniform. He will be stationed at the Washington Navy Yard and he and his bride will reside there on their return from their wedding trip.

Mrs. Wainright has found it warm here since coming but thinks Kansas is even hotter.

Powells Give Fete for 200; Films Shown

Diplomats and Officials Among Guests at Garden Event.

By Dudley Harmon.

Last evening diplomats, officials and a labor leader, Mr. John L. Lewis, witnessed two March of Time films depicting dictators, horse races and the antics of Sally Rand in the flood-lighted garden of the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. Royce Powell, at Alexandria. Mr. Harold Horan, a Washington correspondent of Time magazine, was co-host, and it was through his efforts that the film was obtained.

More than 200 guests, summoned by telegram the day before, gathered for the event. Spreading linden trees and slender poplars cast long shadows over the grass, where guests sat sipping mild mint juleps.

The Ambassador of Cuba, Senor Don Dr. Guillermo Patterson, arrived early, accompanied by his daughter, Senorita Olga Patterson. The American Ambassador to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Mr. William C. Bullitt, who is leaving Washington today for the country and will sail the first of next month to return to his post in Moscow, also was present.

After the showing guests gathered in the dining room for a buffet supper. Among those dining together were Mrs. William T. Mann, Mrs. Enid Snow, Count Fumasoni Biondi and Mr. Ewan Butler, who was substituting as correspondent for the London Times for Sir Wilmot Lewis, while the latter is vacationing in Winter Harbor, Me.

The Second Secretary of the Italian Embassy, Senor Benedetto Catomazza, was among those present. He said the newly appointed Ambassador, Senor Fulvio Suvich, was expected to arrive in September. Lieut. Tucci, of the Italian Embassy, also was a guest.

Others from the diplomatic staff present included the Counselor of The Netherlands Legation and Mme. Molekamp and their house guest, Miss Aletha Harcourt, who wore a gown of brown organdie; the First Secretary of the German Embassy, Herr Ernst Meyer; the three Senoritas Trucco, daughters of the Ambassador of Chile; Mr. Nicholas Lely, Counselor of the Greek Legation, and the Second Secretary of the Spanish Embassy, Senor Jose de Gregario.

Mr. A. K. Mills, who is connected with the March of Time office, and Mr. Brooks Herring, of Time Magazine, came from New York for the occasion. Other guests present included Mr. Robert Kelly, of the State Department; Mr. Eugene Vidal, Mr. Frank Packard, Mr. and Mrs. Rixey Smith, Mr. Emil Hurja, Mr. William Jessup, of New York; Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Nuto, of the Will Hays organization in New York; Mr. Donlad Downes, Miss Florence Harris, the Naval Attache of the Italian Embassy, the Marquis de Sant Orsala, and Miss Diane Rowland.

This was one of several private showings of newsreels to take place in the past year in Washington. Mr. Drew Pearson occasionally invites friends to watch the running of a film in the garden of his home in Georgetown, and early last spring Mr. Horan gave, at the Carlton Hotel, a preview of the "March of Time" newsreel showing activities in the Capital. He received last night's film on such short notice that invitations were sent by wire.

MISS LUCILE SHULTZ, whose mother, Mrs. Claud Lee Shultz, of Oklahoma, has announced her engagement to Mr. Hugh Sylvanus Suggs, son of Mr. and Mrs. Grover C. Suggs, of Phoenix, Ariz. She is a graduate of the University of Arizona and Mr. Suggs is attending George Washington University. Their wedding will take place early in August.

Washington Scene

By the Poe Sisters.

Washington society is hoping to get a glimpse of Alva de Costa Bound when, with her husband, Mr. Charles F. Bound, this attractive grandniece of Elihu Root and daughter of Mrs. Henry Breckinridge, of Washington and New York, comes East this season.

Mr. and Mrs. Bound have made a place for themselves in the smart younger set of Chicago since their marriage last December. Mr. Bound, before his marriage last summer, was a member of the bachelor group of young Chicagoans who occupied a house in Lake Forest. Others in the group were Mr. Philip S. Dalton, jr., Mr. William C. Parke and Mr. Andrew Cooke.

While in the East, Mr. and Mrs. Bound will visit the former's mother, Mrs. Alexander M. Orr, who has a summer home at Edgartown, Mass.

Another interesting visitor of the summer will be Mrs. Frank E. Tours, wife of Lieut. Comdr. Tours of the British Navy, who is the granddaughter of George P. A. Healy, well-known portrait painter of Washington notables. In his lifetime Healy was appreciated for his art and since his death this appreciation has been growing steadily. Mrs. Tours and her two children will be greatly interested in the current exhibition of Healy's portraits now being shown in the Chicago Art Institute.

Washingtonians fortunate enough to rate an invitation to the cozy cottage of Commander and Mrs. Patrick N. L. Bellinger, at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., will meet there some interesting relatives of Mrs. Bellinger, from St. Louis, her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Francois B. Benoist, and their daughter, Tam. The Bellingers are popular members of the Navy set in Washington.

The seamanship of Miss Nancy Leiter, daughter of Mrs. Joseph Leiter, often demonstrated on our own Potomac, is being put to good use just now in the part this debutante is taking in the division races held off Marblehead, near her mother's summer home, Edgewater House, Beverly Farms, Mass. Miss Leiter has entered for the grand finals of the races to be held in the fall.

Last week she guided her trim little craft to victory in her division. Her father, the late Joseph Leiter, was one of the first to encourage what is now a major annual event, the Potomac boat regatta. He always took a keen interest in these races and those on Lake Michigan near his Chicago home.

Miss Florence Johnson and Miss Edith Johnson, of Minneapolis, Minn., are stopping at the Dodge.

Three to Make Bow at Court

Miss Betty Sze, Mesdames Roper and Julian to Meet King.

Miss Betty Sze, daughter of the Chinese Ambassador and Mme. Sze, will be presented to King Edward VIII at the first of two garden receptions to be held Tuesday and Wednesday at Buckingham Palace. The garden receptions are taking the place of the usual courts, cancelled this year because of mourning.

Miss Sze will wear a gown of off-white taffeta embroidered with tiny black stars and made with a cape and full skirt, the hem of which is stiffened. Her off-white transparent straw hat will have a medium brim.

Miss Sze, who has been studying at Cheltenham Women's College in England, will sail on the Queen Mary, Wednesday, to return to this country.

Several wives of American officials will be presented at the garden receptions, including Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, wife of the Secretary of Commerce, and Mrs. William Julian, wife of the Treasurer of the United States.

Daughter Is Born.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Josef Madill are receiving congratulations on the birth of a daughter at Columbia Hospital on Sunday. Mrs. Madill is the former Miss Margaret Shea.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

"I Don't Know What to Do," Says Woman Whose Second Husband Beats Her; Her First Drank.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My problem is this: four years ago I took my daughter and left my husband because he drank and was mean to me, and also because I was in love with another man. Since then I got a divorce and married the other man. I loved him very much and sacrificed everything for him, but it seems something has happened. Nothing is the same.

• • • •

Now my daughter is married, and she is living more than a hundred miles south of here. I tried to do all I could for her, as I realized that I had robbed her of much in acting as I did. I took in sewing in order to have money to spend on her and I think she appreciates the fact that I stuck by her.

• • • •

But my real problem is this: My present husband has a terrible disposition and doesn't seem to realize anything when he has one of his spells of temper. Just last week he beat me so that I had to call a doctor. My health isn't very good and I am very nervous. I just don't know what to do. He says he is sorry for what he did the last time, and will never do it again and asks that I forgive him. Now, should I forgive him, or leave him and make him support me? I am afraid he may kill me the next time, although there may not be a next time. But who knows? I feel he owes me a lot as he did help to break up my home.

• • • •

I have my aged mother with me and she is in very bad health. I am still taking in sewing, trying to help, although my husband makes $175 a month. Please answer soon, as I am waiting for your answer before making any decision.

T. C.

A Difficult Problem.

DEAR T. C.: It is not for me to say whether or not you should forgive your husband his act of violence and trust implicitly in his good intentions for the future. You have lived with him four years, so you should know better than I whether or not he is to be trusted. If you think your life is endangered by living with him, it seems to me you would shake the dust of his household off your feet without waiting to consult anyone about the advisability of departing. The Legal Aid Bureau, 1010 Vermont avenue, Denrike Building, will no doubt advise you free of charge as to what your chances are of securing separate maintenance in case you leave him—providing, of course, that you are without funds to employ the services of an attorney in private practice.

• • • •

Perhaps if you did leave him, or did make a move toward securing legal protection, it might shock your husband into more temperate and considerate conduct. On the other hand, however, it is just possible that such a gesture of defiance would provoke another and even more brutal outburst of temper. Nothing is more unpredictable than the possible moods and reactions of a person who is given to temper tantrums.

• • • •

Having an aged mother to care for certainly adds to the painful complexity of your problem. Has she no other relatives with whom she might go to live for a while, until you have reached some decision and taken some definite action toward righting your own life? If there is anyone at all—some other son or daughter, say—I would suggest you send her there for a time until you have made up your mind as to what to do.

M. H.

Has Idea for Toy.

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am only two months in this country and I don't speak good English. I read The Washington Post every day. Now I have a request to make of you. Will you give to me the names of some manufacturers of toys, because I think I have a good idea for a new kind of toy? Or it may be you have another idea how I could make my idea into money? Yours very truly.

MRS. T.

• • • •

DEAR MRS. T.: I regret to say I do not have a list of toy manufacturers at hand. However, you should be able to get such information from the buyer for the toy department of any of Washington's large department stores. I do not feel qualified to advise you as to how you might convert your idea into cash.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Mottled Teeth.

The chemical element, fluorine, is distributed widely throughout the world. While single deposits are not large, it exists in dilute form in the sea, in mineral springs, and in the water of deep-driven wells in certain regions.

Our interest in this powerful chemical lies in its effect upon the enamel of human teeth during the growing period. If the teeth of children. Instead of being smooth and glistening, are chalky white in some areas with brownish pits in others, it is quite likely that the water used by the household contains fluorine. The characteristic appearance has led to the adoption of the term of "mottled teeth." Unfortunately, the defects are permanent. The brown deposits cannot be removed by any amount of cleaning and nothing can be done to replace the enamel that has failed to form. While the teeth look somewhat unsightly there is no interference with alignment or strength and there is no real evidence that they are prone to decay more quickly.

We must recall that the condition is observed chiefly in the age group 9 to 12 years, although the damage is done during the period of development when the permanent teeth are undergoing calcification. In other words, if water with but a small amount of this enamel destroying element is used during the entire period of childhood the effect may be as noticeable as though a higher concentration were imbibed for a shorter period.

If mottled teeth appear in your neighborhood with any great degree of regularity the water should be tested and if the amount of fluorine exceeds 1.5 parts per million, steps should be taken to obtain water from a different source—one that is free from this deleterious substance. Changing the water supply, however, after children have passed the eighth or ninth year will have little effect since the harm has already been done.

Water from rivers (other than mountain streams) and from fresh water lakes is usually safe. While the precipitation of fluorine can be accomplished through expensive chemical means, this is impracticable in many cases. Boiling does not help.

While the occurence of excessive quantities of fluorine does not constitute a general health problem, it should give us concern as every one desires clean, even, pearly teeth. We may all possess them if the diet is adequate and contains a sufficient supply of vitamin D. But no healthy youngster—even with buckets of vitamins—can neutralize fluorine.

Things That Make Women More Beautiful

Cream to Combat Mosquito Greasless and of Mild Fragrance.

A TRIP into the country over the week-end proved to me the real importance of mosquito cream. A little girl in the household had—and she said she counted them—over 200 mosquito bites on her arms and nothing seemed to do her any good. She said she could not stand the smell of citronella. That is where I became enormously valuable, because I had just discovered a new mosquito cream, the base of which, I am told, is citronella. I cannot prove that, but I know it works and, what is more, it is a soft cream, easy to apply and it has a delicate fragrance. If you live in a mosquito region I would advise you to invest at once. There is never any use in being uncomfortable when you can be comfortable.

Posed by Marsha Hunt.

In order to be beautiful, you have to be comfortable, and I do not think anybody will dispute that, and if you are suffering from the heat here is another hint I'll give you which will take the wrinkles away. If you have only one electric fan in your home put it on the door. It will do a great deal more good than if it is set up high some place. If you can have two of them, put one high and one on the floor on the opposite side of the room. If this isn't a beauty hint I never heard one.

But to go back to the mosquito cream, it is greaseless, stainless and antiseptic. The fragrance is that of cinnamon.

Did Someone Say That Men Don't Like Salads?

Here is one salad that won't be rejected by the he-men of the family, for it has been prepared by the head of the house in his own inimitable style and that smile of satisfaction proves that this salad is a rare combination of his favorite salad ingredients.

What Men Like or Dislike in Salads

Simplicity, Not Tea Room Touch, Appears Key to His Taste.

By Dorothea Duncan.

IT ISN'T true what they say about men and their dislike for salads. Perhaps your husband does greet his salad plate with a frown—he may even turn it down or offer it for a nickel to the highest bidder. My father used to do it regularly especially when whipped cream garlanded the concoction. I think it was just a show of bravado to make his young sons realize that he wasn't a sissy, but he always ended by eating it and mumbling something about vitamins and these new fangled ideas about cooking.

But he had a vulnerable spot, too, for he never complained when wilted lettuce or cole slaw were served These were the good old dishes that his mother used to prepare. He liked them, and when no one was looking he managed to pile his plate with a second helping.

This seems to be the thing about cooking that wives can't understand. They know how their husbands like their roast beef, their eggs or their coffee, but they think that only a woman has any self expression when it comes to fixing a salad.

Simplicity Appreciated.

I have interviewed a dozen men, expecting them all to say, "We hate salads." But they didn't, they like them. They have definite ideas about the kind they like, however, and wives would be surprised to hear just why some husbands refuse to eat their greens. One man rarely touches his salad because it is always served on such a small plate that it can't be eaten gracefully. That is his sole objection to salads—the only reason he could find for not eating them, but he was very emphatic about this one point.

Simplicity is the thing that most men appreciate in salads. The tea room variety or the bridge club conglomeration of fruit, nuts and rich dressing don't seem to appeal to many men either.

One man simply beamed on me when I asked him for his opinion on the salad question. It seems that his wife has solved the salad eating problem in their house by permitting her husband to prepare the salad himself. Most men really like to cook and this particular husband has chosen salad making as his special kitchen diversion. He will never refuse to eat a salad that is prepared his favorite way, and his wife realizes that he has a superior method of mixing a dressing—that he never forgets to rub the bowl with a clove of garlic, and so on.

Cash For Best Five.

And so came the birth of the idea for The Post's new recipe contest. It is to be a contest for husbands and bachelors, too, the theme of which is salads. Tell your husbands or suitors about it. Here is just the opportunity for which they have been waiting. They can write in their honest opinion of salads next week giving their favorite recipe for this dish.

Perhaps the outcome of the contest will mean happier husbands, for wives will learn from the prize winning recipes just what type of salads appeal most to the masculine appetite.

Only men are eligible for entry in next week's recipe contest. Cash awards will be made for the five best salad recipes submitted. The first prize will be $5, the second $3, and the three remaining prizes $1 each.

All recipes should be sent to Dorothea Duncan, in care of The Washington Post. Recipes should be mailed in time to reach this office by next Saturday morning.

Men Asked to Submit Favorite Salad Recipe

The Post's recipe contest for next week will have an interest for men as well as women, but this time it is the women who are asked to sit back and watch the results and the men who are invited to enter their favorite recipes.

Salads will be the theme of this contest and every man who has waited these long years to express his opinion of the salad question is invited to do so by entering his favorite salad recipe in The Post's contest.

Read the accompanying story on salads for further details of this new contest.

A Successful Personality

Does your personality work for you or against you?

Every day, in business, at home, out among friends or strangers, you make some sort of impression. Is it a good one that brings you success, more pay, a better job, more friends, good times, invitations, popularity? Or do you secretly say to yourself, "I'm a dud."

If you do, then stop thinking it. Begin to plan for a vital personality. You don't need to be 100 per cent marvelous. One winning trait is enough to build on.

If you can size up people quickly, develop this talent. Nothing wins people like tact, sympathy for their troubles, enthusiasm for their pet interests.

Daintiness is part of "personality." Dress in good taste, tidy up that hair, keep hands attractive. Nothing gets rid of shyness and inferiority like a smart new frock or hat. People naturally rate you low if you're ridiculously dowdy.

Tame down that hot temper, sweeten that rasping voice. Get rid of the traits that hold you back. Plant those that win admiration.

Our 40-page booklet, "Improving Your Personality," gives you the benefit of a famous psychologist's advice. Learn what other people have done. They weren't born lucky. They won a charming personality by concious effort. You, too, can have that personality that carries you along like waterwings.

Send 15 cents for our booklet, "Improving Your Personality," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of the booklet.

Gloves Easily Cleaned With Sponge Eraser

White and all light-colored gloves can be cleaned in a few minutes with the use of a sponge eraser.

Place the gloves on the hands, smooth them flat and creaseless. Beginning at the fingertips, rub the eraser over the gloves with a strong, stroking motion, working down to the cuff. If you have done your work thoroughly, the gloves should look like new when you have finished.

CHAPTER 37.

RUTH BEGAN to laugh. She laughed and laughed and laughed. It was hysterical laughter, and she knew it for such, and felt deeply ashamed of her nerve having at last given away. But that two men should have offered to back her play in almost the same words had been too much for her composure.

"Forgive me!" she gasped. And then the tears began running down her cheeks. "O, John, I'm so sorry!"

She again began sobbing bitterly as she gasped out, "I know now that I can't marry you. I have tried to bring myself to say 'yes,' because I know how good you are, and because I do care for you very very much as a friend. But that's all, John, and it's not enough."

He said nothing for a moment. Ruth's house of life had been shaken to its foundations this morning, but what she had gone through was as nothing to what he was now enduring as he stared unseeingly before him.

Then he saw that she was looking at him with a piteous expression on her pale tear-stained face, and he said quietly, "I understand how you feel, my dear, and you must forget that I ever thought you could become my wife."

Then his voice, too, broke: "What's happened needn't interfere with our being friends, need it?"

"Why no, of course not," she cried, and her face lost the plaintive suffering expression that had rent his heart.

He put his arm around her shoulder with a protective gesture, "Don't feel unhappy, my darling friend," but she began to cry again, and he took his large clean handkerchief out of a pocket and handed it to her.

Her tears turned to laughter at that, but this time it was natural laughter, and gratitude for his loving kindness.

"Are you sure that there's no chance of recovering any of your money?" he asked gravely, and, as she shook her head, he said, "Who gave you that bad news? Was it your uncle's old friend himself who got through to you?"

"Oh, no, it was a man called George Dwight whom I've known all my life who told me," and as she uttered the name of her informant her face from pale became red and he sensed her agitation.

"George Dwight is a lawyer," she went on, "and it was through him I came to meet Mr. Singleton."

"George Dwight?" the unfamiliar surname smote John Penderdvil's ears. Ruth had never uttered that name, though at times she had talked freely of her past life.

"Is this Mr. Dwight looking after things for you?"

"He would if there was anything to look after. But I'm afraid there isn't. As a matter of fact he's sailing tomorrow, and will be in London in about a week, and so, of course, he will tell me, when we meet, what there is to know."

She waited a few moments, then exclaimed: "I feel terribly sorry for Philip and Iris Trefane, John. My money meant such a great deal to them."

He could not help interjecting dryly, "I know it did."

"However, I've told them both that as far as is in my power I'll carry out my promises."

"I hope Philip hasn't made you sign anything since you heard this bad news," and he looked at her searchingly.

She shook her head. "You're not fair to Philip, indeed you're not. All he asked was that I shouldn't tell anybody yet of what's happened, because he thinks he may have what he calls a backer in view—what they call a 'bird'." She smiled tremulously. "This poor Starling hasn't been of much use."

"Indeed she has—but she mustn't let herself be plucked quite bare!"

There was great tenderness in his tone, and again this time there was nothing hysterical in the tears that came into her eyes.

As if he sensed what she was feeling he exclaimed: "Will you be going to London any sooner than you meant to do?"

"Maybe we shall be leaving sooner than was planned. I think Philip and Iris are going to try and get the agents to break the agreement as to the furnished house we had practically taken for six months."

"Were you going to share the house with them?"

"Why, yes, it seemed better so; and I hope I shall still stay with them for a while. Of course, I still mean to put on the play. I hope to make money from it."

"Now look here, Ruth. I am quite serious in saying that I really want to finance your play. No one would ever know, for of course I should pay the money into your banking account. You will hurt me if you say 'no,' my dear."

"I must say 'No!'" she answered in a low, trembling voice. And she could not have told what made her go on with the word, "If I hadn't enough money to do it, George Dwight would finance the play. That was one of the things he said over the telephone."

"I see."

And this time Lorn John thought he did see. He remembered how vexed he had been when Iris had once said to him in what he called to himself her malicious voice, "She has at least one devoted American beau." Maybe this man—what was his name? George Dwight—was the beau Iris had in mind.

"My mother wanted to send you a note asking you to tea today. I said I'd leave a message. But perhaps I'd better tell her you can't manage it?"

She roused herself from her troubled thoughts. "I'd like to come, John. Your mother is always so kind to me."

Junior Child Least Likely To Make Mark

Baby of Family, as Rule, Left to His Own Devices

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

IT HAS BEEN suggested that the second boy has the best chance to become a successful man because he has before him the exploits of the older brother to spur him.

The first children are naturally objects of great interest and attention. But when there are several children the baby as he grows out of babyhood, and dependence, is not apt to receive the same care and training.

The little duties and tasks that ought to devolve upon children are done by the older ones, and he is left out of the schedule. In play, if he is included, it is likely to be with a certain indulgence that does not demand from him his best exertions. He is allowed to scramble through as best he may.

The mother is generally occupied with the increasing obligations of a growing family and social duties, and the baby is left more or less to his own devices.

This lack of stimulation is not conducive to real development.

If the busy mother could find time every day to see that some small tasks were carried out by the "baby" and develop into action the thoughts and aspirations that lie hidden in the brain of every child, it would make life easier for that child in after years.

All of this is conditioned by temperament. Sometimes a child, no matter what his place in the family, shows such determination not to be relegated to a subordinate position, that it is recognized and no harm is done. But there are many shy and dependent little ones who require direction and development.

Auto Mishaps Take 2 Lives; 2 Sent to Jail

Passenger Dies as Car Hits Boulder; Truck Crushes Man.

Pair Sentenced for Not Having Permit; Safety Drive Begun.

Two men were killed in traffic accidents yesterday.

Edgar Frazier, 24, of Bethesda, Md., died at Georgetown Hospital of a broken neck and a fractured skull yesterday afternoon. He suffered the injuries early yesterday morning when a car in which he was riding left Conduit road and struck a large boulder.

Montgomery County police said the car was operated by Chester Curtis, also of Bethesda, who was unhurt. John King, 21, of Bethesda, a passenger, received lacerations and bruises of a minor nature.

George Eades, colored, 40, of 1211 L street southwest, was crushed beneath the wheels of a truck in the basement of the Archives Building yesterday afternoon. Eades, a laborer, was pushing a wheelbarrow when the truck backed over him.

Police said the truck was operated by Lyle Johnson, 25, of 2014 Portner place northwest. Eades was removed to an emergency room in the building, where he was pronounced dead.

Two Given Jail Terms.

In a new move to "crack down" on lawless drivers, Judge Casey, in Police Jury Court yesterday, sentenced two motorists, convicted of driving without permits, to serve straight jail sentences instead of paying fines.

Clauson E. Strickland was sentenced to 90 days and Walter Williams to 60 days. A third man arraigned before Judge Casey on the same count was fined $25.

Assigned to prosecute Police Court traffic cases, Assistant Corporation Counsel George D. Neilson has established a record of convictions during the last several weeks. Of 12 cases prosecuted last week, he succeeded in obtaining six convictions and bettered his record yesterday with six out of seven.

Meanwhile police and traffic officials pressed their drive against mechanically defective automobiles, determined to rid Washington streets of unsafe vehicles—both private and commercial.

During current efforts to uncover mechanically defective cars, Traffic Department workers have examined 2,200 vehicles since July 1. It was estimated that 65 per cent of these were rejected as unsafe.

Faulty brakes and lighting equipment, discovered when cars were tested at a new type "safety lane" now being demonstrated to local officials, led the number of major defects, it was reported.

Inspect 200 Cars Daily.

The "safety lane"—featuring a series of examinations which test brakes, lights and wheel alignment—is operated at Sixth and C streets northwest. Under the direction of J. Earl Steinhauer, safety engineer, an average of 200 cars are inspected daily. Yesterday 287 vehicles were examined. Of these, 106 were rejected because of bad brakes, lights and other mechanical defects.

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer, long an advocate of compulsory inspection, has expressed a desire to install a number of "safety lanes" as permanent equipment of his department. It is understood that funds are being sought to purchase testing apparatus to be set up in various sections of the city.

In a recent Nation-wide survey, it was revealed that 15,700,200 defective automobiles are traveling the highways. When the American Automobile Association erected a "safety lane" on a heavily traveled Eastern highway several weeks ago, engineers were surprised to discover that 60 per cent of the cars tested were mechanically imperfect.

"There is only one way to forestall compulsory inspection," Van Duzer declared, "and that is to educate drivers in the dangers of mechanically defective cars so they will volunteer to surrender their autos for periodical tests."

Guest Conductor Arrives

ALFRED WALLENSTEIN.

Wallenstein, Here for Concert, Was Tutor to Chaplin on Cello

Former Soloist, to Conduct at Watergate Tomorrow, Played Sadly to Make Mary Pickford Cry; 'Spurned' Pavlowa.

He taught Charlie Chaplin to play the cello. Pavlowa wanted to teach him to dance. A child musical prodigy at the age of 9, he is today, at 37, one of America's well-known conductors. He is Alfred Wallenstein, who tomorrow will conduct the first of the summer symphonies.

Wallenstein is an athletic looking man who talks well and has a sense of humor. He does not believe that music should be an arty business of pale hands and long hair. He demonstrated this at a press conference last night at the Hotel Mayflower.

Saying that he liked the co-operative basis upon which the Washington Summer Concerts Association is holding the symphonies here, Wallenstein added that he thought music should be taken away from the support of the few.

"The days of the Diamond Horseshoe are gone," he said.

Wallenstein believes that symphony orchestras eventually will have either civic or radio backing. The radio, he said, has done much to encourage interest in good music.

He deplored the salaries generally paid to concert musicians. "It is impossible to found an orchestra where the wage scale is so low that the musicians cannot support a family," he said.

Wallenstein, who is musical director of Radio Station WOR at Newark, N. J., believes that radio is the only field that is giving the younger American musician a chance. "At the present time," he said, "there is more musical talent here than abroad."

"An orchestra is a musical instrument on which the conductor plays," he explained. "If the orchestra is a good one, it's always good. If it plays badly it's the conductor's fault. Too often the conductor gets all the praise and the orchestra gets the blame."

Wallenstein took up conducting about seven years ago. He had been a concert cellist before that, but abandoned that instrument for the conductor's baton because the number of cello pieces was limited. He plays the cello now chiefly for amusement.

Born in Chicago, Wallenstein is a lineal descendant of Albrecht Wallenstein, Austrian general, who fought in the Thirty Years War. He went on the vaudeville stage when 9 years old.

After a swing around the old Orpheum Circuit, he trouped to South America with Pavlowa, as her accompanist. Then, 12 years old, he spurned Pavlowa's offer to teach him to dance. "I had seen her die too many times in 'The Swan,'" he explained.

While touring California a year or so later he met Charlie Chaplin. "Chaplin was a hero to me then," he said, "so when he asked me to teach him to play the cello it was just as if God had asked me. But I gave him lessons anyway."

Since then Wallenstein has toured this country and Europe as a cellist and has conducted orchestras throughout the country. He will appear at the Watergate site tomorrow, Wednesday and Friday of next week in the first three of the concerts scheduled in the summer series.

Driver to Fight Speeding Ticket By Park Police

Salesman Challenges His Arrest Near Bridge; Road in Dispute.

A new court battle hinging on police jurisdiction in the District-Virginia "no man's land" across the Highway Bridge was assured yesterday when Clarence E. Brown said he will retain counsel to fight a speeding charge lodged by United States Park Police.

Brown, a salesman living at 314 Seventeenth street northeast, offered to plead guilty yesterday in Traffic Court to driving 38 miles an hour along the Virginia approach to Highway Bridge but the plea was ignored when Judge John P. McMahon continued the case to next Friday.

Never having heard that the territory where he was nabbed Thursday by Park Policeman E. S. Mast is part of the unsolved boundary which has plagued Virginia and the District for years, Brown was prepared to throw himself upon the court's mercy when a continuance was requested by David A. Hart, assistant district attorney.

A guilty plea probably would have killed the test case which the office of National Capital Parks is seeking to force to a conclusion. The point at issue is whether or not Park Police have authority to make arrests along the half-mile of roadway south of Highway Bridge, which is maintained by the District.

Hart asked for a continuance to enable parks authorities to marshal legal strength for the court fight.

Brown, who little realized when given a speeding ticket that he would figure in the latest phase of an ancient controversy, said last night that he was distressed by the incident, but would fight his case as long as he can afford counsel.

Geographic Group Takes Air Photos Of Mt. McKinley

Bradford Washburn, leader of a National Geographic Society expedition, has photographed Mount McKinley from the air, the society announced yesterday.

Only twice have mountaineers reached the summit of McKinley, the highest peak in North America. Washburn photographed both routes by which ascents have been made. Using both still and motion picture cameras, he also photographed Mount Foraker, which is 17,000 feet high and was first climbed two years ago.

The plane used by the expedition was a Lockheed Electra, with a controllable pitch propeller and oxygen equipment especially designed for high altitude flying. The ship was piloted by H. E. Robbins.

Carried in the plane was the blue, brown and green striped flag of the National Geographic Society, emblematic of the spheres of geographic exploration: The sky, earth and sea. The flag has been to the North and South Poles and to the highest altitudes and lowest depths of the sea ever attained by man.

One-Man Car Safer, Sager Tells P.U.C.

Commission's Engineer Backs C. T. C. Request for 40 More.

Other Witnesses Assail Plan, Foresee Loss of Many Jobs.

The one-man street car, so much despised by Washington's organized citizens, is generally regarded as safer than the car manned by a motorman and a conductor, Fred A. Sager, chief engineer of the Public Utilities Commission, said yesterday.

He testified at a hearing before the Public Utilities Commission on the petition of the Capital Transit Co. for permission to add 40 more one-man cars to its fleet of 71.

Sager conceded that the one-man car took longer to load than the two-man car, and that it was slower. Generally, however, his 27-page report was interpreted as an indorsement of more one-man cars here.

At least, People's Counsel William A. Roberts so interpreted it. When the hearing is resumed Monday at 10 a. m., Roberts plans to put Sager through a rigorous cross-examination, particularly on his statement that one-man cars are safer than the two-man variety.

Minimizes Record.

Roberts, who is fighting the installation of any more cars of the one-man type, contends they have made a better record for safety here because they are not used so much in congested areas, and in other cities because they are newer and better equipped than the two-man cars.

Chief Engineer Sager, in his report, proceeded on the theory that ultimately Washington will have 100 per cent of one-man cars instead of the present 15 per cent?

He estimated that, in that event, the Capital Transit Co., would save $841,000 in wages. He thought a little less than half of this saving should be used to buy new and speedier cars, the remainder going to the stockholders.

"It is generally recognized," Sager said, "that one-man car operating results in a material saving in operating expenses it may be proper to consider the use to which any such increase in net revenue might be put in case of considerable increase in one-man car operation in the District of Columbia.

Stockholders' View.

"Undoubtedly, the stockholders might claim that they are entitled to a fair rate on their investment and that a large portion of any increase in net revenue should be diverted to them.

"However, the condition of the property, particularly so far as rolling stock is concerned, indicates a sore need for replacement and rehabilitation of practically all of the existing rolling stock.

"Since the existing rolling stock has been purchased, speed of travel by all methods has increased to such limits that most of the present rolling stock is deplorably slow in comparison with other vehicles and it is believed that at the earliest possible moment sufficient new cars of modern type, which are available with ample speed of acceleration and braking to compete in speed with other vehicles on the street, should be purchased to serve the entire base day service, this requiring in the neighborhood of 250 such new cars.

Cost $15,000 Each.

"These vehicles can now be purchased at a price of approximately $15,000 or less and 250 such vehicles would represent an expenditure of about $3,750,000.

"The interest and depreciation on this expenditure, figured at as high as 10 per cent, would amount to $375,000 per year, an amount less than one-half of the estimated saving due to full one-man operation."

Sager, whose report was based in part on a questionnaire sent to other cities where the one-man car is in vogue, said that in general no layoffs of employes have followed transition from two-man to one-man cars. Deaths, resignations and the like among employes, he said, make it possible to decrease the number of car workers without discharging any.

At this point, F. B. Wise, 24-year-old graduate of the University of Maryland, who lives at 35 U street northwest, projected himself into the hearing.

Fears Unemployment.

"I know that one from two leaves one," he said. "Yet I have heard here that the extension of the one-man car will not cause any unemployment. It is said that the men not needed will be absorbed. But if one man is used to do the work of two, won't that create fewer jobs?"

Nobody challenged his logic, commanding officer of the unit.

Earlier in the day, William F. Simms, president of the local division of the Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway and Motor Coach Operators of America, spoke against the use of more one-man cars here. A conductor here since 1919, Simms said he spoke for 94 per cent of the platform employes of the Capital Transit Co.

Simms objected particularly to the slowness of the one-man car. He said that while he has been serving on a two-man car on the Mount Pleasant line, his car has been delayed as much as 9 minutes by a slow-moving one-man car ahead.

Supported by Five.

Simms' objections were backed up later in the day by five other trainmen—Floyd F. Edwards, L. E. Weaver, Arthur Snell, A. A. Lansildho, Howard B. Norford and James S. Ayers.

They all said they preferred the two-man type of car, and they agreed that work on a one-man car was nerve-wracking and hard on the health.

Henry F. Foulds, 1221 Thirtieth street, who said he was a "professional car rider," urged the commission to approve extention of the one-man cars. He said he makes 16 to 18 trips a day on street cars, and has never seen a one-man car behind schedule or in an accident.

William McK. Clayton, chairman of the utilities committee of the Federation of Citizens Associations, told the commission that in 25 years he had never known a civic organization to approve the one-man car. Even if there should be a reduction in fares, he said, he felt that the citizens' associations still would oppose the one-man car.

Artillery Group To Leave Today For Ft. Monroe

D. C. National Guard Unit Will Undergo Training for Two Weeks.

More than 400 officers and members of the 260th Coast Artillery unit of the District National Guard will leave this morning for Fort Monroe, Va., where they will undergo two week's training in anti-aircraft gunnery.

The guardsmen will be transported to the fort in a convoy of more than 50 automobiles and trucks, including 12 new cargo trucks recently acquired by the unit. Members of the guard will board the trucks at 7 o'clock this morning at the two armory stations, at Water and O streets southwest, and at Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

Most of the men going to the camp spent last night at either of the two armories. Breakfast was to be served them this morning before their departure.

The instruction that the unit will receive at Fort Monroe will include training in the duties of field artillery, in the firing of machine and anti-aircraft guns at towed airplane targets and in the use of anti-aircraft searchlights at night. The camp program will also include athletics and social events.

Note Tied to Car Hints D. C. Man May Be Suicide

Robert Gittings, Operator of Cleaning Plant, Parks Auto, Disappears.

A brief note attached to the steering wheel of an automobile was the only clew police had to the mysterious disappearance of Robert Gittings, 22, Kensington, Md.

The automobile was found yesterday by Harry Harrison, barrel factory worker, parked in front of 1249 Water street southwest. Harrison told harbor police he saw a man park the car Thursday, shortly before the boat for Mount Vernon sailed at 10 a. m.

The automobile was unlocked, but its windows were closed. The note addressed to "Kitt," his wife, said:

"I can't stand these hours any longer. I am through. I am going down on the moonlight. Take care of Sonny. I love you always.

"BOB."

Gittings, manager of a cleaning establishment at 1925 New York avenue northeast, failed to return home Wednesday after telling his wife he was going to a newspaper office to leave some advertising copy.

Mrs. Gittings, police said, told them her husband had an argument with an employe shortly before he left the cleaning plant Wednesday night. The man, she added, told my husband, "I'll get you tonight."

The man was picked up by police yesterday, but released after police were satisfied he made no threat to his employer.

Mrs. Grace Gittings, the missing man's mother, identified the handwriting in the note, and the car, as that of her son. Mrs. Gittings lives in Kensington, with Gittings' 21-year-old wife, Katherine, and their 3-month-old boy, Sonny.

A missing person lookout described Gittings as 6 feet 2 inches tall, weighing 145 pounds, black eyes and hair, dark complexion, wearing blue trousers and a white shirt when last seen.

Policeman Arrests Youths Robbing His Neighbor.

Detective Robert J. Barrett, who lives at 522 First street southeast, had only to go next door, early yesterday, to capture two youths as they attempted to rob a neighbor for the fourth time in a week.

John Risnick, of 524 First street southeast, complained to Barrett that he had been robbed of small sums from his clothing while asleep.

The detective promised to keep a lookout for the housebreakers. About 4 a. m. yesterday he saw two boys trying to gain entrance to Risnick's home. Slipping on his clothes, he ran from his house. Hearing him, the youths fled, but were arrested after a block-long chase.

The boys, one 16 years old, and his brother, 12 years old, who live in the vicinity, admitted to police they had broken into Risnick's home four times this week. The older boy, Barnett said, was returned from New York last week and is now awaiting trial here on charges of stealing an automobile.

Parks Board Adopts 9:15 School Start

Hope for Improvement in Traffic Handling Leads to Step.

After approving a 9:15 a. m. starting hour for public school classes, naming of the four inner Mall roads after the first four Presidents and miscellaneous other proposals, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission yesterday finished a two-day session and adjourned until September 24.

The Commissioners decided that conflicting traffic conditions would be improved if schools began at 9:15 instead of 9 a. m. as at present. A recent canvass of parents by the Board of Education showed 8:30, 9 and 9:30 a. m. were about equally favored, Chairman Frederic A. Delano reported to the planners.

It was voted to recommend to Secretary of the Interior Ickes that the new Mall roads be named Madison, Washington, Adams and Jefferson drives. The drive immediately below Constitution avenue would be named for the fourth President because he wrote the Constitution.

Bills were introduced in the last Congress providing that the four park roadways be named for States but the measures never reached the floor.

To Press Measures.

Senator William H. King, of Utah, chairman of the Senate District Committee and ex-officio member of the planning body, expressed the opinion traffic conditions have improved here and promised to expedite handling of any measures affecting the problem that the commission might sponsor.

Further study of possible zoning changes was authorized by the planners, who voted to employ Alfred Bettman, Cincinnati expert, for a 10-day period this summer.

Approval was given landscape plans for Judiciary Square, submitted by Municipal Architect Nathan C. Wyeth, and plans for two projects offered by John Ihlder, chief of the Alley Dwelling Authority. Seventeen developments initiated by the ADA have now been approved by the commission, which yesterday expressed satisfaction with the Authority's progress.

45 Areas Studied.

T. C. Jeffers, secretary of the coordination sub-committee of the District Recreation Committee, reported 45 recreation areas have been studied and plans completed for development or improvement of 22. The group, composed of representatives of the Board of Education, National Capital Parks and District government, has held 18 meetings in the last nine months.

The commission recommended transfer of Battery Cove, in Alexandria, from the War Department to the National Park Service and approved plans providing for a land use survey of a Federally owned 120-acre tract below Great Falls, Md. Both of these projects would be incorporated in the George Washington Memorial Parkway scheme.

Thomas S. Settle, commission secretary, reported all bills sponsored in the Seventy-fourth Congress by the planning group were enacted and no legislation was passed which might be considered harmful to the commission's objectives.

Two Infants Saved From Death by Gas

Rescued from death by asphyxiation by their mother who found them semiconscious on the floor of their home while gas flowed from two jets of a stove, two infants were treated in Emergency Hospital last night.

They were Robert and Donald Vernon, 2 and 1 year old, respectively, of 1515 L street northwest. Police sent detectives to investigate but they were unable to ascertain how the jets were turned on.

Mrs. Fredda Vernon, mother of the two children, was taking a bath in another part of the house, she said, while her children were being overcome by the gas. She said she found them on the floor. They were taken to Emergency Hospital in a taxicab, revived and later carried home.

Half-Beak or Full-Beak Fish, It Hurt Sailor Just the Same

What is that fish known as the half-beak, and just how does it commit mayhem?

A controversy arose on this point here yesterday when the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics issued a statement relating how a sailor on his day off went fishing in tropical waters and was stabbed by a garfish, often identifed as a half-beak.

"Suddenly," asserted the statement, "a fish known as a half-beak leaped out of the water and stabbed him under the chin, the beak piercing the roof of his mouth."

He added that, because of this deformity, the half-beak always strikes sideways and not forward, and that plain science was against the bluejacket being struck by this sort of marine creature.

"The doctor checked the story," cracked back the Navy Bureau of Aeronautics, "and, upon consulting expert fisherman of this area, learned that these same fish often dive into the side of a boat, embedding their beaks in the planking."

"It could have happened," agreed Orsinger. "I know a man who was killed when the fish leaped into his boat and stabbed him through the heart. It wasn't a half-beak, though, but a whole one."

'T-Men' Steal G-Men's Stuff In Earle Film

By Nelson B. Bell.

"COUNTERFEIT." Columbia Pictures filmization of a story by William Rankin, adapted to the screen by Mr. Rankin and Bruce Manning, featuring Chester Morris, Marcot Grahame, Lloyd Nolan and Marian Marsh, with Claude Gillingwater, George McKay, John Gallaudet, Gene Morgan, Pierre Watkins, Marc Lawrence, Frank Moran and the late Tammany Young. Directed by Erle C. Kenton. Reviewed Friday afternoon.

BELL.

Cut from the same general pattern as all of the recent films disclosing the manner and methods of the Federal law enforcement agencies in running down organized crime, this exciting subject varies from the rest only in that it transfers the base of Governmental action from the Department of Justice "G-men" to the Treasury Department's Secret Service and makes counterfeiting the victim of its cunning, instead of bank robbery, murder and kidnaping.

A little slow in getting under way, "Counterfeit" nevertheless brings a familiar touch to Washington audiences by introducing rather comprehensive glimpses of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, engaged in the business of producing millions in paper bills, and winds up in a climacteric blaze of glory when the "T-men" put the "heat" on the transgressors of the law.

Counterfeiting Tricks Revealed.

It is a particularly well-organized band of counterfeiters with which the forces of law and order tangle in this picture. They even invade the Bureau of Engraving and Printing with a sight-seeing party and kidnap the plant's best plate engraver as a substantial groundwork for their future activities. It is made to appear that this dyspeptic expert, splendidly played by Claude Gillingwater, has met death in an auto accident, whereas he has been lured into a kidnaping trap by a beautiful blonde, "thumbing her way" to work.

From this point on, the story of the picture becomes a war of wits between the United Setates Secret Service and the outlaws, flooding the country with bogus $10 and $20 bills through a perfectly organized system of distribution, out of each step in which the handler of the "hot money" gets his "cut."

Agents of the Government, of course, are cleverly planted in the counterfeit gang and they do the boys practically no good whatever when it comes time for the last roundup. Romance is introduced in the gentle passions that spring up in the chilled steel hearts of the chief counterfeiter and his "moll" and the undercover man of the Treasury Department and Aimee Maxwell's kid sister, who has no part in the racket except as she is dragged into virtual imprisonment upon stumbling into the counterfeiter's hideout. In addition to this interpolation of a more tender note than that of murder and thuggery, a strong comedy vein is tapped by George McKay, in the role of "Angel" White, enjoying a brief period of truancy from Sing Sing.

Morris and Nolan Score.

In the opposing roles of counterfeiter king and T-man, in the gang's confidence, Lloyd Nolan and Chester Morris perform with a display of cast-iron nerve that seems just a little too good to be true. Margot Grahame, that stunning blonde English actress who made her American debut with Victor McLaglen in "The Informer," and Marian Marsh, who plays a little perfunctorily in a role that could do with a little more spontaneity, are the gals of the plot. A long catalogue of others appear in roles covering a wide range of official and underworld types and each does his allotted task with precision and skill.

On the stage at the Earle this week things are made easy for Audrey Sieber, mistress of ceremonies. After Miss Sieber has introduced Benny Davis' "Star Dust Revue," she is through for the afternoon—or at least until the next show— and Benny does his own M. C.-ing from then on. I do not recall that he ever has brought a livelier or more talented group of youthful entertainers to the Capital than the one he has in town on this visit. Their abilities run the full range of theatrical endeavor from all forms of dancing through skillful instrumentalism to impersonation, singing and clowning.

Potential Show-Stoppers.

From a roster that embraced the Three Wiles, the Manhattanites, Margie Palmer, Tony Angelo, Catherine Harris, Don Hooton, Dave Dawson, Rosamond, Alice Miller, Vera Neva, Chick and Chicken and Benny's own song medleys, it was impossible to pick any outstanding favorite of the audience yesterday afternoon—they all practically "stopped the show."

If any preference were to be expressed, a personal choice would be in favor of David Dawson's uncannily accurate impersonation of President Roosevelt speaking over the radio; Chick and Chicken's sepia dancing; Tony Angelo's singing, the Chaplin-Durante-Groucho Marx bit by the Wiles and the harmony singing and comedy of the Manhattanites.

Paramount News and a "Popeye the Sailor" cartoon comedy supplement a feature that suffers only by being the last of its type, instead of the first, to reach the screen.

Palace

"SAN FRANCISCO." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a story by Robert Hopkins, with screen play by Anita Loos, starring Clark Gable and Jeanette MacDonald, and featuring Spencer Tracy, Jack Holt, Jessie Ralph, Ted Healy, Shirley Ross, Margaret Irving, Harold Huber, Edgar Kennedy, Al Shean, William Ricciardi, Kenneth Harlan, Roger Imhof, Charles Judels, Russell Simpson, Bert Roach and Warren B. Hymer. Music and lyrics by Gus Kahn, Bronislau Kaper, Walter Jurmann, Nacio Herb Brown and Arthur Freed. Dances staged by Val Raset. Directed by William S. Van Dyke. Reviewed (second week) by W. A. Whitney.

Not since last November and "Mutiny on the Bounty" has Washington so reacted to a motion picture at Loew's Palace Theater as it has to the sensationalism of "San Francisco," which continues to thrill audiences with Clark Gable and Jeanette MacDonald, Miss MacDonald's voice and the climactic earthquake sequence.

A glance at the italicized paragraph above will provide ample reason for the astounding popularity of this opus. Here is, indeed, a picture which could not help but be "box office"—in story, in cast, in direction and in production it has virtually everything which past experience has proved highly acceptable to the theater-going public.

At this time there is no need for further discussion of this piece. If you have not seen it you probably will, and if you have seen it you do not need to be told about it, and, furthermore, probably will go again.

The supporting program embraces "Polo," with Pete Smith typically discoursing on the rich man's game; "Two Little Pups," a clever Technicolor carton, and a release of the Metrotone News.

Metropolitan

"THE PRINCESS COMES ACROSS." Paramount picturization of a story by Philip MacDonald, adapted from a novel by Louis Lucien Roger, with screen play by Walter DeLeon, Francis Martin, Frank Butler and Don Hartman, starring Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray, supported by Douglass Dumbrille, Alison Skipworth, William Frawley, Porter Hall, George Barbier, Lumsden Hare, Sigmund Rumann, Mischa Auer, Tetsu Komai, Bradley Page and Bennie Bartlett. Music and lyrics by Phil Boutelje and Jack Scholl. Directed by William K. Howard. Reviewed Friday afternoon (return engagement) by W. A. Whitney.

It is all good fun, this coming across from Europe of a Brooklyn showgirl who assumed, for Hollywood contract purposes, the nom de guerre of Countess Olga of Sweden. The fact that while "The Princess Comes Across" there are several murders in no way lessens the inherent fun of the piece.

Whether one cares to consider this work as just plain entertainment—which it most certainly is—or as a commentary, slightly satirical, on title-worshiping Americans and on the inefficiency of detectives—and it is this, too—does not particularly matter. this picture will afford considerable enjoyment for those seeking relaxation of a summer's day.

But it does seem strange that, with what seems to be a transatlantic convention of criminologists aboard ship, it takes an American "concertina squeezer" to solve the mystery of the violent deaths. Yet it is all part of the process by which Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray finally get together for the clinch finale.

Among the more outstanding aspects of the concoction is the grand manner effected by the "princess" in out-Garboing Garbo. The supporting company is fine, and the whole thing, while starting a bit slowly, gains momentum to its exciting finish.

A repeat engagement of "The Song of a Nation"—that Technicolor story of the writing by Francis Scott Key of "The Star-Spangled Banner"—tops the auxiliary program. "Shanghaied Shipmates" is an amusing Looney Tune and the combined releases of the Paramount and Universal News reels round out a diverting program.

Columbia

"PRIVATE NUMBER." Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of a play by Cleaves Kinkead, adapted to the screen by Gene Markey and William Counselman, co-starring Loretta Young and Robert Taylor, with Basil Rathbone, Patsy Kelly, Marjorie Gateson, Jane Darwell, Paul Harvey, John Miljan, Monroe Owsley, Billy Bevan and George Irving. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Reviewed Friday afternoon (repeat engagement) by Sally Stroud.

There may be rumors of wars, Olympic games and so on and so on, but young love we have with us always. And the Loretta Young-Robert Taylor team is a fine exponent of the sort of affection Dorothy Parker moans that "she ain't got."

Sure, the story is trite, but the principal actors are young and fair and their lines have the ring of sincerity. The girl suffers and suffers, but she gets her man. There might be a lesson in her gentle forebearance which only once breaks down and permits her to shout in an excess of emotion. That would be the scene where she voices the idea which motivates the frail plot. Namely, a poor girl can love a rich boy and he can love her and money can't change their loving each other.

There are some sweet sentimental scenes amidst the Maine woods, a secret wedding, grievous misunderstandings and a few other trappings to lead up to the scene where the heroine tells the world she cared naught for money. It is all handled deftly, with a smoothness which modernizes an emotion sometimes outdated by our streamlined civilization.

Plenty of girls will identify themselves with the fragile and lovely Loretta. And Robert Taylor is an ideal matinee idol, if such must be. Marjorie Gateson is the mother of the rich boy, one of the nicest wealthy women yet portrayed on the silver sheet. Basil Rathbone is the sinister element, buzzing nastily in the ointment. Patsy Kelly is her rough and rowdy ownself.

Ideal entertainment for a hot-summers day. The auxiliary bill includes "Puddy the Pup" in a Terrytoon short; Clara Barry and Orval Whilledge, in a comedy combining music and slapstick, and the Movietone News.

Officers Are Chosen By D. C. Display Men

Officers of the newly formed group of Washington Display Men, elected Thursday night at an organization meeting, met yesterday noon at the Mayflower Hotel to consider plans for acquiring the most members possible in the new organization.

Officers elected at the Thursday night meeting were Arthur Gray, of Lansburgh & Bro. department store, president; James Styles, of the Hecht Co., vice president; Joseph McCann, of Kann's, treasurer, and O. D. Grimes, of Palais Royal, Inc., secretary. Approximately 20 representatives of department stores and shops attended the organization meeting. They decided to inyite the International Association of Display Men to hold its 1937 meeting in Washington.

From Honky-Tonk to Grand Opera

This smiling young woman would be the Mary Blake of that sensational screen success, "San Francisco," now in its second capacity week at Loew's Palace Theater. She sings popular songs in Blackie Norton's Paradise Cafe on the Barbary Coast and then moves uptown to sing "Faust" and "Traviata" for the aristocrats of Knob Hill. In persona propria, as she appears here, she is, of course, that charming screen soprano, Jeanette MacDonald. The Blackie Norton, as you must know by now, is the two-fisted and dimpled Mr. Clark Gable.

An Eerie Play Of Revenge Is On Fox Screen

"THE DEVIL DOLL." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of an original story by Tod Browning based on the novel, "Burn, Witch, Burn," by Abraham Merritt, screen play by Garrett Ford, Guy Endore and Eric Von Stroheim, starring Lionel Barrymore, supported by Maureen O'Sullivan, Frank Lawton, Pedro de Cordoba, Henry B. Walthall, Rafaela Ottiano, Arthur Hohl and Robert Greig. Directed by Tod Browning. Reviewed Friday morning by Dorothea Lewis.

Tod Browning has here a strange picture but, unfortunately, not another "Unholy Three," for all his trying. It has familiar things about it, bringing back memories of that most thrilling and intelligent of all intelligent thrillers, but because it dips into a supernatural or pseudo-scientific realm, it loses the realism which gave such a terrifying atmosphere to the earlier picture.

Paul Lavond escapes from prison after 17 years of plotting revenge against his three partners who were guilty of the crime for which he was convicted. With him escapes a dying scientist, who reveals his horrible secret, a method of reducing the size of living creatures to that of dolls, without killing anything except their free will. Once reduced, man, woman or animal, will obey the concentrated will of normal men and women. Through these tiny "Devil Dolls," Lavond proceeds with his plan of revenge.

If you can accept the major premise and convince yourself for an hour and a half that such devil dolls could exist, you may get chills up and down your spine. If you can't—and we're sorry we couldn't—you'll admire the trick photography and follow the tale of fantastic revenge with interest, but little excitement.

Masquerades as Man.

As in "The Unholy Three," the central character, a man, disguises himself as an old woman, the proprietress of a shop, but the Chaney ventriloquism in the earlier picture was easier to believe than the Barrymore mental telepathy, in this. The wigs and make-up are much alike.

Barrymore does well enough by Lavond, with the proper falsetto voice at times and nice sincerity in scenes with his daughter. Rafaela Ottiano, always a clever actress, is blood-curdling as the half-mad Malita. Maureen O'Sullivan and Frank Lawton are reassuredly normal, though Frank's clipped English accent is a bit strange coming from the lips of "Toto, a Parisian taxi driver." The late Henry B. Walthall appears briefly. Pedro de Cordoba, of the magnificent voice, does a grand piece of work as one of the three marked for revenge.

The best scene in the play, and a good example of Mr. Browning's success with suspense, is the one in which De Corboba waits, while the clock ticks on and on to the hour marked for his punishment. If the entire picture reached this pitch, it might have been another "Unholy Three."

Stage Bill Clicks.

The stage at the Fox this week is a pleasant place. It has "Slim" Timblin, that black-faced, preachin' gentleman, who hasn't changed his hilarious act more than a trifle since regular two-a-day times and doesn't need to, except for a possible minor clean-up campaign.

Then there is young Mr. Kenny Baker, stepping out of the pages of Esquire in that blue suit, and singing the house practically down about his feet. He comes from Jack Denny's radio program; his voice is excellent; his manner a little Dick Powellish.

The Elida Ballet goes from truckin' before a polka-dot curtain to traditional ballet with the greatest of ease, while Miss Eleanor Tennis contributes two graceful solos. Joe and Jane McKenna clean up the stage floor in a knock-about act which has its high moment in the "adagio" number. Here for the first time, the young man of the act reveals that fine terror that must run through all adagio-gentlemen's veins when they perceive the young lady of the act about to throw herself upon them.

The Movietone News, a sportorial short, glorifying the "Feminine Form," and Phil Lampkin's overture of hits from "Spring Is Here," which will be here next week, complete the bill.

Reviewing Stand.

Frank Parker, tenor, who started to fame on the Jack Benny program, has not yet rallied from the shock . . . For years, Parker has been going with a New York girl . . . In fact, she even handled his money for him, investing it in Wall Street bonds . . . A week ago, the girl insisted that he take her out to lunch . . . "You always insisted that I handle your Wall Street investments, Frank," she said . . . He nodded, in surprise . . . "Well, I hate to tell you this, but I've fallen in love with the broker who has been trading for me" . . . "What about him?" Parker asked . . . "He's in love with me," explained the girl, "and tomorrow we're going to get married" . . . So they were married, are now honeymooning, and Parker is on his way to the Coast . . . And as yet, the dazed Parker hasn't made any plans to shift his account from the broker who won his girl.

GARBO.

You see their pictures in the paper, celebrities arriving on ships, departing on trains, disembarking at airports—because the gentlemen of the camera cover a lot of negative with a lot of pictures . . . But not all of the celebs are willing subjects . . . Martin McEvilly, greatest news photographer of all time, estimates that the four toughest camera subjects over a span of years have been: Col. Lindbergh, J. P. Morgan, Judd Gray and Greta Garbo . . . Of the four, only Lindbergh is really disliked by the news lensmen, and they base their dislike on the ground that before he flew to Europe he posed all over the lot for them.

• • • •

Had he been camera-shy before the famous flight, the news photographers would excuse his present reluctance as sincere . . . But the fact that he willingly posed when he was an unknown, and only developed his present attitude after becoming famous, has soured the cameramen on him for life.

• • • •

The camera toters have a saying that eventually a lens will even up everything . . . Irascible J. P. Morgan for years heckled and abused the photographers, taking advantage of his wealth and position to berate men who were trying to earn their $30 a week . . . But eventually the lenses evened up the score; irascible Morgan posing with a midget on his lap at Washington, D. C. The cameramen still howl over this idiotic picture as poetic justice . . . Garbo is a difficult subject, but photographers excuse her on the ground that this pose is part of her racket, and thus justified.

• • • •

Lots of celebs have been difficult to photograph during a "spot" story. Gene Tunney, when he became engaged to Polly Lauder, was inaccessible, but before and since, that time the fotogs have had no difficulty with him . . . Tunney, at the height of his isolation, was ambushed by McEvilly at Damariscota, Me.

• • • •

The picture, showing Tunney crouched in the bottom of the taxicab and disguised in goggles, is one of the important permanent souvenirs of the trade.

• • • •

Generally, however, the lensmen experience little difficulty because most people like to see their pictures in the paper . . . But these are not "news" . . . Only when a subject bites a lens does it become news . . . Lindbergh, J. P. Morgan, Judd Gray and Garbo are lens-biters, and thus of news importance.

Culbertson On Bridge

Stubbornness Doesn't Pay.

Just as most brilliant plays can be placed in a definite category: Vienna coup, double squeeze, elimination play, etc., so the "bulls" at the bridge table run according to the type. One of these types occurs frequently in the defense of no trump contract. A defender doggedly plugs away at establishing a suit even though it would do him no good to establish it, since, as the bridgism goes, "he couldn't get into his own hand with a jimmy." Such a play as West made today, for instance.

South, dealer.

SOUTH

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 spade	Pass	2 diamonds	Pass
*2 no trump	Pass	3 no trump	Pass
Pass	Pass

*South two no-trump bid was a distinct stretch.

West opened his fourth highest heart and dummy's nine could have held, but declarer saw at a glance that the bulk of his tricks had to come from the diamond suit. Therefore he overtook with the ten spot and led a diamond up to dummy. East captured the king with his ace and returned the five of hearts. Declarer ducked and West won with the king. Now despite the fact that a long diamond suit, either established or within a trick of establishment, stared him in the face, and further despite the fact that he would have no quick entry for his heart suit after forcing out declarer's ace, West stubbornly continued with hearts. Declarer won, and after conceding the jack of diamonds to East, laid down the hand for nine tricks without even attempting a club finesse for the queen.

After West took the king of hearts, elementary reasoning would have demanded a shift of leads. The diamond suit menace was pressing; it was vital to try a suit that might produce at least two tricks, and produce them quickly! Dummy's club holding made that shift look unpropitious. The one remaining chance was in spades. That the declarer had started with a spade bid should have cut absolutely no ice; if the defenders couldn't get two spade tricks they couldn't get two from anywhere.

Obviously, a spade shift would have defeated the contract handily.

Sale of Tickets For Symphony Opening Is Set

Part of Tomorrow Night's Proceeds to Go to Police Boys Club Fund.

Tickets for the opening concert tomorrow night of the "Symphonies on the Potomac" series will be on sale at 6 p. m. tomorrow on the upper and lower levels of the watergate at Arlington Memorial Bridge. Thomas J. Mullikin, business manager of the concerts announced yesterday.

The first program, opening at 8 o'clock under the direction of Alfred Wallenstein, will include the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven and the Dubensky "Tom Sawyer," inspired by Mark Twain's classic.

Hundreds of chairs, according to Mullikin, are being placed on the lower level near the stage for holders of the dollar seats. The 50-cent chairs will be placed a little farther off, leaving at least 4,000 25-cent seats on the watergate steps.

Part of Sunday night's proceeds will go to the fund of the Metropolitan Police Boys Club. The 80 members of the orchestra, Washington musicians, are planning all the details of the series.

Wallenstein, the guest conductor of the first concert, will also wield the baton for the program next Wednesday and Friday nights with Eunice Norton, pianist, and Joseph Coleman, violinist, as soloists.

Norfolk Boat Strikes Barge Off River View

Passengers, Crew Escape When Steamer Rams Naval Craft.

One hundred and sixty passengers returning from Norfolk to Washington aboard the steamer Northland were jolted slightly early yesterday when the boat drifted head-on against a Navy barge in the channel near River View, about ten miles south of Alexandria. Fog was believed responsible for the collision.

The Northland, of the Norfolk & Washington Steamboat Co., suffered no damage and arrived in Alexandria only a few minutes behind schedule.

The barge, which was being towed by a Government tug, YCF No. 6, and was returning a load of guns from the proving grounds at Dahlgren to the Navy Yard, was only slightly damaged, according to Lieut. Comdr. L. S. Perry, of the Navy Yard. An investigation into the collision will be held, probably Monday, he said.

Capt. George E. Nowell, of the Northland, said there was no excitement among the passengers when the slight jolt came.

The barge, with the tug, resumed its trip to the Navy Yard. When it was struck, it was traveling at the rate of about five knots, Perry reported.

1st Workouts Held as Sea Calms

Wrestling, Boxing, Relay Teams' Makeups Not Yet Decided.

By Alan Gould.
Associated Press Sports Editor.

Aboard S. S. Manhattan, en route to Berlin, July 17.—America's Olympic team members regained their sea legs and appetites under favorable weather conditions today as all teams worked out at least once for the first time.

The result made for better organization as apparently all the athletes responded whole-heartedly to the appeals of the officials to adhere to the rigid training schedules.

Washington's eight-oared crew reported intact and worked out on the machines in shifts of four men each, relieving Coach Al Ulbrickson's worries that several of his men, including Stroke Don Hume, would not shake their sea sickness in time to get in workouts before landing in Germany.

Relay Team Undecided.

The boxers and wrestlers, with at least two positions open on each team, had the briskest sessions. The heavyweight and light-heavyweight wrestlers are slated to settle their No. 1 choice on shipboard, but the ranking sports among the heavyweight and welterweight fisticuffers may not be decided until the final workouts in Berlin.

The 400-meter relay team probably will be made up of Sam Stoller, of Cincinnati; Frank Wykoff, of Glendale, Calif.; Foy Draper, of Southern California, and Ralph Metcalf, of the Marquette Club, Milwaukee. Head Coach Lawson Robertson indicated he preferred the quartet on the basis of experience. Wykoff was a member of the 1928 and 1932 teams, anchoring the record making quartet four years ago at Los Angeles.

O'Brien May Be Out.

The make-up of the 1,600-meter relay team is still undecided with the possibility that Eddie O'Brien, Syracuse star from Atlantic City, may be left off entirely. The chances are Robertson will name an all-California quartet unless Harold Cagle, of Shawnee, Okla., is selected.

The sky-scraping basketball team found the rooms too low for safety and shifted their workouts forward to avoid obstructions. The baseball squad, which will play an exhibition at Berlin, worked out minus Richard Hanna, San Francisco outfielder, who was ordered to bed for "fruit hives." His condition was not serious.

Mrs. Lenore Knight Wingard, free style swimming ace, reported with a slight hand infection but it was not considered serious.

Dimitri H. Zaitz, shotputter from Boston College, challenged all rivals at the noon meal when he managed to get away with three helpings of steak and salad and then topped them off with cherry pie ala mode and watermelon.

Germans Laugh—For the Olympics

Berlin, July 17 (AP).—In order to prepare them for the ordeal of the Olympics Berlin's working population today began "a week of laughter" at the suggestion of the Labor front.

"The coming eight days will be days of jollity and cheerfulness," said the announcement. "Prior to the strain of the Olympic weeks, Berliners should take stock of themselves, then with merry heart and friendly expression on their faces receive their Olympic guests. None should miss this chance."

There was no immediate reaction except on the faces of the visitors who read the proclamation.

Newspapermen, Olympic athletes and officials were given a tangible reason to smile with the announcement that, starting today, their Olympic credentials were good for unlimited free passage on all Berlin buses, subways, trams and electric trains.

Heavyweight Title Battle Hits Snag

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 17.—They were laying odds on West Forty-ninth streets tonight that James J. Braddock and Max Schmelling will not fight for the heavyweight title this fall.

Negotiations between Mike Jacobs and Madison Square Garden collapsed today.

Since the Garden controls the champion and Schmeling is under contract to Jacobs, the situation is at a complete standstill. The proposed deal blew up when the Garden admitted its failure to deliver Tony Canzoneri, the lightweight champion, to Jacobs in return for Schmeling's contract.

Had his gone through, Jacobs would have staged a Barney Ross-Canzoneri fight at the Yankee Stadium in August, leaving the Garden to put on the heavyweight show at its Long Island bowl in September.

The Garden had agreed to turn Canzoneri over to Jacobs with the promise that Tony would fight for 20 per cent of the gate receipts.

This fell through when Canzoneri's manager, Sammy Goldman, held out for 25 per cent of the gate and a bonus of $10,000.

The next move, if any, is problematical. Jacobs says he'll sit tight until July 29, when the Garden has agreed to come up with a satisfactory opponent for Braddock, then attempt to dicker directly with the champion, contract or no contract.

The Garden has said it will fight such a move in the courts. A legal battle probably would delay things weeks, even months.

First Jacobs offered to buy Braddock for $75,000, or sell the Garden Schmelling for $50,000 and 10 per cent of the receipts over $500,000.

When the Twentieth Century turned thumbs down on this, the Garden offered $50,000 for Schmeling if Max would agree to fight Braddock for 15 per cent of the gate. Schmeling wouldn't.

Varoff, Pole Vault Titlist, Returns a Hero, Speaker

San Francisco, July 17 (AP).—George Varoff, San Francisco's pole vaulting janitor who leaped to a world record bettering height of 14 feet 6½ inches in the national championships—and provided additional news by failing to make the Olympic team—returned home today to a big welcome.

He ate two breakfasts, met the mayor, made a speech and turned down an offer to go back to pushing a broom.

The 22-year-old Hawaiian-born Russian youth was slightly bewildered. The Russian colony turned out en masse. He shook hands so many times his arm resembled an old fashioned pump handle in action.

St. Louis, July 17.—Dizzy Dean won his fifteenth victory of the season today, 5 to 4, after losing his sixth yesterday.

New York, July 17 (AP).—Vernon Wilshere, young left-hand pitcher released several weeks ago by the Philadelphia Athletics, received the same treatment today from the Yankees. He was offered a contract to hurl for the Yankee's International League Farm in Newark, N. J., but turned it down, so the New York Club let him go.

Playground Lassies Stroke Way Toward City Title

Misses Decker, Bishopp Win In Tennis

A pair of tense, three-set struggles ended late yesterday on the Chevy Chase playground courts with Charlotte Decker, of Janney, and Hazel Bishopp, of Takoma Park, shikily situated in two of the four semifinal berths of the annual District girls' playground tennis championships.

Miss Decker, a semifinalist last year, fought a two-hour battle with Helen Orme, of Burroughs, twice a finalist, before winning with a gallant finish, 4—6, 6—3, 8—6. Miss Bishopp, tall, calm and collected, wore down the experienced Eileen Lennon, of Montrose, to win, 6—4, 4—6, 6—2.

At the same time, Champion Willie O'Steen, who eliminated both Miss Decker and Miss Orme last year, was vanquishing Charlotte Matajs, of Burroughs, 6—3, 6—4. The Virginia Avenue girl was occasionally bothered by Miss Mataja's left-handed chop shots, but had enough power and experience to pull through by a comfortable margin.

Miss O'Steen must face Irma Williard, of Takoma Park, at 2 p. m. in a quarter-final match today. In the one remaining quarter-final Lucille McDowell, of Burroughs, co-holder of the doubles crown with Helen Orme, encounter Margaret Duffy, of Chevy Chase, at 1:30 p. m.

The Decker-Orme match proved to be one of the most gruelling engagements the tournament has seen. The end finally came with Miss Decker staging a desperate rally, when trailing 5—6 in the deciding set, to win three straight games for the set and match.

Miss Bishopp's victory established her more firmly as the tournament's foremost dark horse this year. Playing in a city-wide tournament for the first time, the Takoma girl has displayed exceptionally fine strategy, consistent pace and smooth stroking. It was these factors which finally beat little Miss Lennon, who weighs less than 80 pounds.

Yesterday's Results.

Irma Williard (Takoma Park) defeated Evelyn Lewis (Sherwood), 6—1, 6—0; Margaret Duffy (Chevy Chase) defeated Virginia Hunter (Tech Oaks), 6—4, 6—1; Willie O'Steen (Virginia Avenue) defeated Charlotte Mataja (Burroughs), 6—3, 6—4; Hazel Bishopp (Takoma Park) defeated Eileen Lenno (Montrose), 6—4, 4—6, 6—2; Charlotte Decker (Janney) defeated Helen Orme (Burroughs), 4—6, 6—3, 8—6.

Alvis, in Tears, Says He Gave Ross Away

By Bill McCormick.

Mr. Raymond Carlisle Alvis, the Walkathon impresario, is perhaps the most disgruntled person in Washington today.

Mr. Alvis, it seems, once gave away Barney Ross, the welterweight champion of the world, who is fighting District Welterweight Champion Phil Furr on Washington's three-star show of champions at Griffith Stadium July 22. And therein lies a story.

Mr. Raymond Carlisle Alvis slunk down behind a mug of beer and a large plate of pretzels and unfolded the story the other night.

"It all began back in Chicago when I was a very successful fight manager and promoter, indeed," sighed Carlisle, flicking a blob of beer suds off his nose. "Oh, yes, I was a very successful fight manager and promoter indeed. Why at one time I had 65 fighters—four of them world champions—and a suite of offices that would knock your eye out. I'll never forget what Dempsey said to me when . . ."

"The Barney Ross story," he was reminded.

"Oh, yes. Well, it seems it all started before I knew anything about it. By that, I mean there was a little Jewish boy over in a pretty tough neighborhood, who suddenly started to fight. The kid's name was Barnet Rasofsky and before very long he attracted the attention of Davey Miller, then Chicago's leading referee."

"Davey Miller, himself a Jew, always was deeply interested in Jewish fighters. He did the best he could for Ross—for that's the name the Rasofsky kid took in the ring—but pretty soon became convinced that Barney needed the very best of handling as he was championship material."

"So, Miller started haunting my offices, telling me all about the great prospect he had. Prospects were 10 cents a gross in those days.

Munger Beaten In Amateur Golf Play

By the Associated Press.

Omaha, Nebr., July 17.—Young Paul Leslie, of the Jefferson City (Mo.) Leslies, made a balky putter operate to perfection today on one all-important green, the thirty-eighth, to overcome Jack Munger, Dallas' Southern amateur champion, in the five-star thriller of the Western Amateur Golf Title Tournament.

All square due to Munger's spectacular 32, 34—66, six under par for the best round of the tournament, as they finished the regulation 36 holes under the same tireless Nebraska sun, they moved on to extra duty.

The first overtime hole was divided in par 4s, and when Leslie's second shot on the thirty-eighth stopped 40 feet from the cup, with Munger only 8 feet away, the black-haired Missourian's chances of reaching the semifinals appeared gone.

Goes to Semifinals.

He stepped up with a putter that had failed him on numerous occasions during the day, drilled the long, curling putt into the can for a birdie 3. Munger's bid for a life-giving birdie missed the cup by a fraction of an inch.

Leslie's sparkling putt gave him the right to meet Chicago's Johnny Lehman, the tournament favorite, in a 36-hole semifinal tomorrow.

Lehman, although lacking the brilliance that characterized his shooting during the last two days, functioned steadily to overcome another Dallas youngster, Don Schumacher, in a stubbornly fought match, 1 up, in 26 holes.

The day also was marked by the upset defeat of one of yesterday's heroes, Fred Haas, jr., of New Orleans, 4 and 2, by Don Fraser, tall Omahan. Fraser, who survived the first day of match play where his more-famous neighbors, Walker Cupper Johnny Goodman and Rodney Bliss, failed, caught Haas weak and all but ill from the heat and sun glare. However, shooting the course in 1 under par for the 23 holes, the Omaha youngster played enough golf to have given the Southern star a terrific battle under any circumstances.

Hess Beats Welsh In West Va. Tennis

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., July 17 (AP).—The Hess brothers, of Houston, Tex.—Wilbur and Jake—will decide the West Virginia tennis championship tomorrow.

They won their way through the semifinals today in matches played under a scorching sun.

Jake, jr., eldest of the brothers, waged a three-hour fight to defeat the defending champion, Barney Welsh, of Rockville, Md., 13—11, 2—6, 7—5.

Earlier in the day Wilbur Hess eliminated Paul Kunkle, of Cincinnati, 6—2, 6—2.

Myer, Still Sick, Goes Back to Post Today

Desperate in his efforts to bring the Nats out of their three-game slump, Manager Bucky Harris today will shoo Capt. Buddy Myer off the bench into the regular line-up.

Myer, still ailing from a stomach disorder, but vastly improved, has advised Harris that he is eager to play and end his five-week absence from the line-up.

With both Shortstop Red Kress and Second Baseman Ossie Bluege well worn by their consistent play in the heat spell, Harris would prefer to give both a rest. But with Myer as the only infield replacement, Bluege will be transferred to shortstop in place of Kress and the Nats' captain will reassume his second base post.

Today finds the Nats meeting the second-place Cleveland Indians in the first of a three-game series, with a double-header scheduled tomorrow. It is Buddy Lewis Day at Griffith Stadium, with the District American Legion honoring the 19-year-old third baseman who graduated into baseball from the Junior American Legion tournament.

Lewis' parents will arrive from Gastonia, N. C., today to watch their son honored. A legion band and fife and drum corps will serenade the stands, and Lewis will be presented with a gift by his admirers in home-plate ceremonies.

Two American Legion junior teams will take the field at 1:30 p. m. in a game preceding the Washington-Cleveland contest.

Ross Will Speak On Radio Today

Barney Ross, world welterweight champion, who meets District Welterweight Champion Phil Furr at Griffith Stadium next Wednesday night, will be a busy little man on the radio today.

Barney will be interviewed by Arch McDonald, the Peoples Drug Stores radiorator, and a staff of assistants, over Station WJSV at 6:15 p. m. Immediately following the McDonald broadcast Ross and his followers will fly from WJSV to Station WMAL, there to be interviewed by Jim McGrath, pinch-hitting for Billy Coyle, in the sports parade program starting at 6:30 p. m.

One of the most intelligent of present-day boxers, Ross will discuss the impending bout with Furr and answer other questions fired at him by McDonald, McGrath and others.

Yankees Win Battle of 7 Homers

Detroit Bows, 9-4, as Victors Equal Batting Record.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 17.—The Yankees came out of their batting doldrums with a lodd blast today, slugging home run balls all over their home lot, equalling an American League homer record and walloping the Detroit Tigers, 9 to 4.

The victory, third out of four starts for the Yanks in the current series, sent the Tigers down to fourth place, as the Boston Red Sox moved up to third by defeating the Browns.

The Yankee record-equalling stunt came in the third inning, when Red Rolfe, Lou Gehrig and Bill Dickey smashed out circuit clouts, equalling the mark first set by Washington in 1902 and repeated by various clubs since. It was the eighth time the Yanks have done the trick, with Gehrig figuring in the barrage on seven occasions.

In addition to the three third-inning homers, the Yanks also got one in the second, when Tony Lazzeri hit one out of the park with two mates on base.

Yanks Set 3 Marks, Tie 1 In Game With Tigers

New York, July 17 (AP).—In addition to equalling the American League record for homers in one inning by poling out three in the third frame of today's game with the Detroit Tigers, the Yankees also wrote these marks into the record books:

Passed the 100-home run mark for the season.

Boosted their record for more than 100 homers in one year to 15.

They are now shooting at the mark of 173 for a season, made by the Athletics in 1932.

Victors Only Game Out Of Fifth

By Shirley Povich.
Sports Editor of The Post.

Staging a gallant rally in the ninth inning yesterday, the Nats hammered two runs across the plate, but fell short of tying the score—11 runs short.

The White Sox won the ball game, such as it was, by the lopsided figures of 16 to 5, with the help of five Washington errors and 18 hits produced against some incredibly atrocious pitching by, chiefly, the left-handed Earl Whitehill and the equally left-handed Syd Cohen.

The upshot of it was the rampaging sixth-place Chicago team swept the three-game series, buried the Nats deeper in fifth place, and hauled themselves to within a game of the Nats' berth.

The game was fairly close—for one inning. That was when Washington scored a run in its first time at bat to reduce the Soxs' margin to 3-1. But in the third inning, with the Sox scoring eight runs off Whitehill and Cohen, the game got entirely out of hand.

It was Washington's most dismal performance of the season. Coincident with the Nats' comparative helplessness against the slow-ball repertoire of Rookie Italo Chelini, they were a clumsy crew in the field. Ossie Bluege, who hadn't made an error in six weeks, came up with a pair of 'em on successive plays in the big third inning; Cecil Travis bungled a pair of hits into rightfield and Red Kress dropped a throw from Bluege that you or I could have caught in the dark.

Whitehill Chased.

The Sox didn't dally long with Whitehill. They nudged him for three runs in the first inning when Appling bashed a triple into rightfield with two on base, they piled two hits on Bluege's two errors in the second to score another run, and then in the third they banged Whitehill right out of the box.

Whitehill retired Jackie Hayes in the first batter to face him in the third, but the second man out in the inning was Whitehill himself. But not before he had given Dykes a single by failing to cover first on a grounder hit to Kuhel, and not before pitching a single to Sewell, walking Chelini, and pitching another single to Radcliffe.

When Cohen made his appearance the Sox already had three runs over the plate during the inning and Rosenthal singled to left to drive in one more. Cohen did strike out Haas but then he pitched a single to Bonura that scored the fifth run of the inning, a single to Appling that drove in the seventh, and after walking Hayes, he saw two more runs score on a ball booted by Kress.

Cincinnati, July 17 (AP).—Van Lingle Mungo received perfect fielding and batting support from the Dodgers today and won his ninth game of the season with a 5-to-3 edge over the slipping Cincinnati Reds.

Lady Higloss Sets Suffolk Downs Track Mark to Take Feature

Spixi Places, Ladfield Is Third

Winner Runs 6-Furlong Route in 1:10.4 as 10,000 Watch.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, July 17.—Unleashing a bolt of speed that squelched her stoutest challenger, Lady Higloss, Miss A. Doris' chestnut mare, flew her purple and white silks on top all the way to set a new Suffolk Downs track record of 1:10.4 in the Back Bay Purse, 6-furlong sprint feature, today before a crowd of 10,000.

The Ladkin mare went to the post 3-to-5 favorite and paid $3.40 in the mutuels. Before victory was hers, however, she had to hold off the strong stretch drive of E. A. McCann's Spixi, which had stayed at her heels all the way.

Spixi, beaten a head, had a length and a half the best of Mrs. C. Crane's charging Ladfield, which was two lengths in front of Mrs. J. Freedman's Wise Player. Spixi was worth $3.20 to place, and Ladfield brought $2.20 to show.

Johnny Deering shook Lady Higloss out of the gate to an early lead and was never headed, despite the driving finish. Spixi was right on her heels going out of the gate, but by the time the first turn was reached the winner had drawn away to a length-and-a-half lead. Ladfield, away last, charged strong as the race progressed and, coming down the stretch, turned in a stout effort, but did not make his bid early enough to challenge the leaders.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SUPREME MAIDEN, $5.00, $4.00, $3.00; BULLFINCH, $17.00, $10.40; GIANTESS, $7.60.

SUPREME MAIDEN went to the front in the opening strides, drew clear, and steadied along in front had to be hard ridden at the end to stall off BULLFINCH. The latter worked her way up gradually and, closing with a rush, was going the fastest of all at the end. GIANTESS, well placed and restrained early, came to the outside in the stretch and held on stubbornly in the closing drive. THE REW, in nearest chase of the early pace, faltered in the last three-sixteenths. SANDY BOY saved ground at the stretch turn and held on gamely to the end. BALAATH, well placed early, weakened in the closing drive. ITSIE BITSIE was never able to reach the leaders. SHANTIME stopped badly.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:35. Off at 3:36½. Winner, Mrs. Haughton's br. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—PHARATIME, $8.80, $4.80, $4.00; FREDRICK, $6.40, $4.40; BACON, $5.80.

PHARATIME was steadied along for the first half-mile, moved up stoutly on the inside thereafter, gained command at the furlong pole and was slowly drawing out at the end. FREDRICK, kept within striking distance of the leaders, moved up on the outside and fought it out determinedly to the end. BACON had good speed, but was much used in racing with DEAN SWIFT and had nothing left when challenged by the two leaders. THE BAILIFF, far back early, made up some ground. DEAN SWIFT fought it out gamely for the lead with BACON, was caught in a jam approaching the furlong pole and Kamar had to take up and was never able to recover.

KENDAL GREEN moved through on the inside in the run down the backstretch, gained the lead after rounding the far turn, drew clear, but had to be hard ridden at the end to hold MISS GINBAR safe. The latter, steadied along back of the pace, responded gamely when called upon and fought it out gamely. PEACE MOVE was well placed throughout and closed stoutly in the final drive. BE JUST was well placed throughout and had no excuses. SUN CAMP closed a big sag. GOLD CLIP faltered after going six furlongs. BUSBY never could reach the leaders. JOLLY faltered in the last three furlongs. LADY SAGE trailed throughout.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—LUCY GLITTERS, $10.00, $5.20, $4.40; SWIFT LAD, $11.80, $6.80; BARON LYNN (entry), $4.60.

LUCY GLITTERS, away with the leaders, gained a slight lead after a brief brush with PEGOTTY ANN, drew into a good lead, but had to be hard ridden at the end to hold SWIFT LAD safe. The latter lacked speed to keep pace early, swung to the outside in the stretch and closed with a rush. BARON LYNN, unruly at the post, was in the forefront all the way, though unable to keep pace in the closing sixteenth. PEGOTTY ANN went along with the winner for the first three-sixteenths, dropping back gradually thereafter. ROYAL RANK went evenly. PARIS MODEL tired. HI-VIC, away slowly, was devoid of speed throughout and showed a dull effort.

LADY HIGLOSS, slow to leave the stalls, moved up fast on the inside to gain the command before the opening three-sixteenths, fought it out courageously with SPIXI all through the stretch and outlasted the latter at the end. SPIXI, closest chase of the pace for practically the entire trip, fought it out courageously to the end. LADFIELD, unable to keep up in the run down the backstretch, closed some ground, though unable to reach the first two. WISE PLAYER had good speed, but was not suited to a route of mile. MALBROUK was outrun all the way.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAPLE MINT, $36.60, $13.60, $9.00; NOTICE ME, $5.20, $4.40; THE DAUPHIN, $6.80.

MAPLE MINT, racing along in close pursuit of the pace, wore down NOTICE ME in the stretch and, fighting it out courageously all through the closing furlong, outlasted the latter at the end. NOTICE ME, rated along back of the pace, went to the front when MICABIL began tiring, carried the winner out straightaway, entered the stretch and fought it out gamely. THE DAUPHIN moved up on the inside of the leaders and closed willingly through the stretch. HALLOO closed some ground in the last three furlongs. MICABIL displayed good speed, drew away into a long lead, only to falter in the last five-sixteenths. TRAUMINT was far back throughout.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won ridden out; place, driving. Went to post at 5:35. Off at 5:36½. Winner, Mrs. A. J. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BUCKMINSTER, $12.80, $7.00, $5.40; OLDFIELD, $4.60, $4.20; MARFREE, $5.80.

BUCKMINSTER outran his field to the first turn, drew away into a good lead, was never seriously headed in front and was never seriously threatened. OLDFIELD, under steadying reserve early, closed stoutly through the last furlong. MARFREE, within striking distance of the leader all the way, held on stoutly to the close. ROLLING DERE, blocked around the first turn, had to ease back, moved up threatening on the stretch and swerved to the inside in the last furlong, weakening at the end. ROYAL GOLD was never able to reach the leaders. GRANDPA'S BOY faltered badly in the last three furlongs.

PEEDEEQUE was not hurried during the early stages, began moving on the outside leaving the backstretch, swung to the outside of the leaders in the stretch and, closing gamely, was up in the last sixteenth. POCKET, well placed from the outset, fought it out courageously to the close. SEAWICK moved into contention in the run down the backstretch, was on the inside all the way and held on willingly to the end. WANDREL, a trailer until the last three furlongs, closed some ground. ALMAHA showed good speed, faltering in the last three furlongs. LADY HOCKBERGER had early speed, faltering badly in the last half-mile.

Arlington Park Lassie Stakes Set Today

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 17.—The queen of the American turf for 1936 will be crowned at Arlington Park tomorrow with the eighth running of the $37,000 added Lassie Stakes, richest race for 2-year-old fillies in the world.

There is grave danger, however, that the fillies may have the spotlight taken away from them and switched over to a secondary race involving 3-year-olds engaging in a final preparation for next week's $30,000 added Arlington classic. This 1⅛ miles gallop includes four of the leading candidates for the Arlington Special. It will put Granville vs. Mr. Bones in a race that the East and West alike has been waiting for since the two finished noses apart in the Belmont Stakes in New York. Two of the best Western 3-year-olds, Hollyrood and Count Morse, also figure as contenders.

The Lassie Stakes at 6 furlongs attracted the usual fashionable field. The overnight entries include 15 thoroughbreds and not a top-ranking filly in the Nation is missing from the line-up. Overnight in the betting showed that the entry of Apogee and The Queen, owned by Hal Price Headley, of Lexington, Ky., ruled as favorite. This was because of Apogee's great race in the Hyde Park Stakes a week ago, in which he was beaten only by inches by the Milky Way Farms Stable's colt, Nation's Taste.

Ft. Myer Jolts Md. Poloists in Opener

13 to 5 Upset Makes Team Favorite

Visitors' Potent Attack Is Checked in Divisional Title Series Game.

By John R. Vosburgh.

Polo ponies thundered in clouds of dust over a sun-baked West Potomac field yesterday as the Third Calvary Yellows, of Fort Myer, jolted a favored 12-goal Maryland Polo Club from Baltimore with a 13-to-5 defeat in the opening match of the Southeastern divisional championships.

Outclassing the powerful visiting team from start to finish, the Cavalrymen made themselves heavy favorites to win the tourney and qualify for the national championships at Cleveland. Cyril Harrison, seven-goal internationalist and one of the 12 or 14 ranking players of the country, was held to two goals by the Army officers.

Two other first round matches are scheduled for today. At 2 p. m., the War Department will meet the Third Cavalry Greens at Fort Myer and at 4 p. m. the Quantico Marines will collide with the Sixth Field Artillery team of Fort Hoyle, Md.

Observers Astonished.

Observers were astonished at the ease with which the Cavalry passed its first-round hurdle.

The playing surface was very dry, and rather rough, but also very fast. At times the ponies were almost completely enveloped in clouds of dust. On fast excursions down the field the general impression of the players was one of an approaching unit of the French Foreign Legion galloping over the desert.

Capt. Harry Stadler, veteran of the Army team which played the Mexican army two years ago, led the Third Cavalry attack along with Capt. Don Galloway, each scoring four goals. The Maryland team, carrying 12 goals, conceded one goal to the 11-goal Cavalry quartet, but the Fort Myer horsemen quickly proved the gift more or less superfluous.

With Stadler scoring three goals, the Yellows jumped to a 6-1 lead in the first three chukkers. The Baltimore team, clad in white helmets and dark blue polo shirts, was having its hands full in fighting a defensive battle. Harrison time and again came through with some smart retrieving, but after putting the ball in a scoring position generally had no one to go through with the play.

The East field was being constantly sprinkled throughout the day in an effort to have it in suitable playing condition for today's match. The West field was used yesterday.

Lawrence Sets Record With 68 at Beaver Dam

Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam golf professional, yesterday told of a couple of low-scoring rounds performed by Beaver Dam members during his recent absence. W. C. Lawrence set an unofficial amateur record recently by shooting a 68. L. Lavine shot a 76 Thursday, and yesterday A. C. Hodges shot a 78, the first time he has broken 80. He was playing with A. H. Thompson, Jack Palmer and Charles Eddy.

Incidentally, Spencer will play in the Philadelphia open tournament Monday and Tuesday at the Manufacturers Club, in Philadelphia.

Miss Marian Brown won the blind hole tournament first prize yesterday in ladies' day competition at the Manor Clb. Mrs. T. N. Beavers was second. Mrs. L. G. Bray, with an 80, and Mrs. Beavers, with an 83, shot exceptionally fine rounds.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich.

Mr. Barnet David Rasofsky has done tolerably well in the prize ring since shortening his name to Barney Ross and shortening his punches to trip-hammer length. So well, in fact, that he became the champion of the world's lightweights, kissed off that title, and became the champion of the world's welterweights.

POVICH.

He is the lad who, pound for pound, is acknowledged to be the best fighting man extant in the world. Thus it behooves Phil Furr, the local pride, to be at his level best next Wednesday evening when he parts the ropes at Griffith Stadium and crawls into the ring for the fight whose proceeds will be translated into food and fun for the kids at The Washington Post's summer camp for the underprivileged.

Mr. Ross will not be laying his title on the line when he squares away against the ambitious Furr at Griffith Stadium, but there will be a powerful incentive for Furr to win. He need but make it a close fight to catapult himself into the big money that a return match with Ross would bring in New York.

New York promoters would snatch the bout up if Furr, perchance, thumped Ross on the chin just once and set him down on the canvas for a spell if not for the full count. The man who can knock Ross down, even if he loses to Ross, can start counting his ready money. Or even if Furr cannot spill the champion on the floor, that ready money still awaits him if he can manage to seriously annoy the man who doesn't have a single worthwhile opponent in sight.

At first glance, or even second, Ross is a sure shot to beat the bungling Furr, but there is no such item as a foregone conclusion inside the prize ring. Furr is no more than a 4-to-1 shot against the champion, yet Jimmy Braddock was 10 to 1 against Max Baer, and you couldn't get a bet down on Joe Louis against Max Schmeling.

And if you are the kind of folks who always string with the puncher, then you've got to string along with Furr. Champion or no champion, Ross cannot punch straight away with the local lad and if a Furr right, or even a Furr left lands solidly on the Ross chin, the champion of the world's welterweights will do some strange things standing up if he doesn't sit down.

But reaching that Ross chin is something else again. Ross beat the clever Tony Canzoneri twice and if a chin cannot be reached by Canzoneri with deadening effect, then it isn't in the books for Furr to reach it.

Somehow though, this department's thoughts on the subject persist in reverting to the Louis-Schmeling fight wherein it was supposed that the clever Louis couldn't be reached with a right hand. I counted 37 rights that Schmeling landed on the Louis jaw when I saw the films.

This Furr at least is egoist enough to think he can beat Ross and the folks at Griffith Stadium on Wednesday night will be watching a fellow who fancies himself a swell fighter and will be out there trying to make good on his boasts.

On the radio last night, Furr didn't hide his feelings in the matter. Forgetting perhaps that he was talking about the world champion, or perhaps not forgetting, he didn't stop at telling his listeners he was going to make a battle out of it. No, sir, and the quote's are Phillips: "I know I'll have Ross on the floor at least once, perhaps twice. Now, if I can only keep him down. . . ."

This department has often gained the impression that it isn't the money that attracts Phil Furr to the ring. It's his supreme ego.

* * * *

The purses he gets out of his fighting strike me as being very much secondary to the pleasure he gets out of the fancy clothes they will buy and the strutting it enables him to do before his fair-weather friends in Southwest, at the Walkathon, or the other places he likes to go—and strut.

Australian, Nazi Cup Teams to Meet

London, July 17 (U.P.).—Australia and Germany were even-money favorites tonight to wage one of the grandest battles in history beginning tomorrow for the right to challenge England in the finals of Davis Cup tennis competition.

Germany, seeking its first chance to face a cup defender in history, will rely on smooth-stroking Baron Gottfried von Cramm, All-England finalist for the last two years, and Veteran Henner Henkel. Jack Crawford, former Wimbledon champion, and Adrian Quist, Australian titleholder, will carry the load for team from "down under."

The series will open on the historic courts of the All-England Club with Crawford and Henkel meeting each other. Quist and Von Cramm will meet in the second singles.

UNKNOWNS WIN.

The two-hit pitching of Bausch carried the Unknowns to a 2-to-0 victory over the Sun Dodgers yesterday at Catholic University practice field and into a tie for first place with the Orioles. Hermie Schmarr, C. U. athlete, was the losing pitcher, though allowing but five hits. Bausch's double started the winning rally in the fifth, during which the winners collected three of their five hits.

Furr Seeks Alvis, Who Piloted 3 Welter Champs, as Second

Phil Furr, District welterweight champion, yesterday sought the assistance of a past-master in the fisticuffing game to help him beat World Welterweight Champion Barney Ross when they collide at Griffith Stadium next Wednesday night in Washington's first show of champions.

Phil is seeking the services of Ray Alvis, who for years controlled the welterweight situation, as a second when he meets the ring's outstanding fisticuffman in the bout promoted for the benefit of the Summer Camp Fund, sponsored by The Washington Post.

Alvis, for many years one of the country's leading managers, had complete control of Welterweight Champions Young Jackie Thompson and Jackie Fields. Thompson, twice holder of the championship, was the first and only Negro ever to rule the 147-pound division. Alvis also pulled the strings from behind the curtains on three other welterweight champions, so he should know the division and its fighters.

Ross, the man for whom Furr is gunning, will arrive in Washington at 8:45 this morning. He will go from the Union Station to the Carlton Hotel. There he will map out his program of training activities and social engagements until ring time.

After reading the reports of Washington's hot weather, the world champion yesterday decided to begin his training here indoors. He will, therefore, start his training at the Humidor Gymnasium, 1121 Fourteenth street, later moving outdoors at Griffith Stadium, if he decides the sun will not be too hot. He had, before deciding against it, expressed a preference for the Woodmont Country Club—a Jewish club—as his training site.

The world champion probably will indulge only in light limbering-up exercises today. Sunday he probably will work hard in the gymnasium, tapering off Monday and Tuesday. Monday it is expected that Ross and his handlers will journey to Baltimore to meet sports writers and radio commentators from the city which is expected to send many fans to the fight.

77 Begin Quest For Muny Net Title Today

With the general theme that it is "anybody's championship," a field of 77 will begin play today on the Rock Creek courts for the Public Parks men's singles title, monopolized in recent years by Barney Welsh and Dooley Mitchell. Neither Mitchell, the five-time champion, nor Welsh, the present champion, are in the starting line-up.

Faced with the task of picking eight seeded men, the tournament committee finally hit upon Pat Deck, Nate Ritzenberg, Ray Stocklinski, Allie Ritzenberg, Arthur Simmons, Bill Contreras, Happy Jacob and Dean Judd—in that order. Whatever luminaries there are in the field of 77, are lying more or less dormant in this seeded list.

Barney Welsh not only left his championship undefended but the subject of the most determined scramble that the tournament has seen. The tournament committee has ordered all winners of first-round matches to play at 5 and 6 p. m. in an effort to get to the third round by tomorrow.

Women's singles entries close at 6 p. m. today at the Tennis Shop and the Rock Creek courts. Men's doubles will close at the same time. Play in the women's singles will start Sunday.

Among the seeded players today, Pat Deck must face Duncan McDuffie at 3 p. m., Nate Ritzenberg must play James G. Homer, and Arthur Simmons, John Desch. Stocklinski faces a formidable foe in Wily Glasmire.

Alvis Tells How He Gave Ross Away

so I didn't pay too much attention to him—and he went away."

At this juncture Mr. Alvis ordered a new glass of beer and another plate of pretzels, then carried bravely on.

"Then came the sad part," he confessed, watching morosely as tears started dripping into his suds. "I was having a friendly glass of beer with Gig Rooney, who had Frankie Fields, then welterweight champion. With a few beers, Gig became very generous."

"'Lissen,' he said, 'I've got a great little fighter that I'm going to give you. His name is Barney Ross—and you can have him.'"

"I was feeling just as generous by this time, so I suggested that Sam Pian and Art Winch were having kinda tough sledding at that time and why didn't Gig give Ross to them?"

"That's exactly what Gig did—and that's how I came to give Barney Ross away and lose my chance to manage my sixth welterweight champion."

Agriculture Netmen Beat Patent Office, 4-1

Department of Agriculture continued to keep pace with Public Works Administration in their battle for second place in the Departmental League yesterday by sweeping four out of five matches from the Patent Office netmen on the Potomac Park courts.

Mather and Rulloda (Agriculture) defeated Goldsmith and Snyder, 6—3, 6—1; Martin and Hagell (Agriculture) defeated Gardes and Snyder, 6—3, 6—4; Byrd and Medlin (Agriculture) defeated Freedman and Carney, 6—3, 6—3; Brown and Von Saal (Agriculture) defeated Patrick and Behn, 7—5, 6—1; Levy and Wolk (Patent Office) defeated Hottecker and Swenson, 7—5, 4—6, 6—2.

Western Aces Top Clay Court Net Play

McNeill, 3 Californians Reach Semifinals in Eastern Tourney.

By the Associated Press.

New York, July 17.—The West conquered the East in the quarter-final round of the Eastern men's clay court tennis championships at Jackson Heights today when three Californians and one Oklahoman won places in the semifinals.

Robert Riggs, the Los Angeles youngster who heads the seeded list, his doubles partner, Wayne Law, Stanford graduate, from Pasadena, were California's representatives, but they had to make room for Don McNeill, the "iron man" Sabin, of Hollywood, and John Kenyon, College freshman, from Oklahoma City.

McNeill, unseeded and virtually unknown when the tournament started, turned in a 5—7, 9—7, 6—1 victory over 43-year-old Manuel Alonso, of New York, former Spanish Davis Cup player. It was rated only as a minor upset in view of the feats McNeill has performed in the last few days.

Riggs Has Letdown.

Riggs had a letdown against Leonard Hartman, of New York, the runner-up last year, and barely pulled out a 1—6, 6—4, 8—6 victory. Law, like McNeill, an unseeded player, eliminated the second seeded star, J. Gilbert Hall, of South Orange, N. J., 1—6, 9—7, 6—3. Sabin conquered Frank Bowden, seeded just a notch above him in fourth place, 6—3, 6—4.

Intense Heat Drives Corn To New Peaks

Advance Again Reaches 4-Cent Limit; Wheat Prices Lower.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, July 17.—Record-breaking high prices for corn went hand in hand today with excited buying rushes that resulted from corn belt temperatures up to 116 degrees. With persistent widespread lack of moisture as well as abnormal heat and forecasts that conditions yet promised no relief, the corn market again and again today hit the topmost allowable limit of 4 cents overnight rise of values.

Wheat values drooped after an early advance of 2 cents, and at the last showed material losses.

Corn closed flurried, 2⅜@3⅞ cents above yesterday's finish, July, 92¾@92⅞; September, 89¾@89⅞; December, 83¾@83⅞; wheat, ¾@1¼ down, July, 1.05¼; September, 1.05@1.05¼; December, 1.05@1.06⅛; oats, ⅝ off to ⅛ up; September, 39⅛@39¼, and rye showing 1⅜ setback; September, 72¼. In provisions the result varied from unchanged figures to a bulge of 22 cents.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively, A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Maintain Advance With Steel Shares Leading; Wheat Prices Lower.

New York, July 17.—Stocks on a turnover of 1,500,000 shares moved uniformly higher, and some of them were unusually energetic. Gains were almost universal up to the close of trading. Bonds were hard in the speculative departments, but Government issues felt weak. Grains were set back. September wheat closed ¾ of a cent lower at 105⅛ cents a bushel.

Government bonds continued soft and discussion of the recently announced increase in bank reserve requirements was still an active subject of conversation in the market and among the banks. It is the common understanding that the Federal Reserve System is not supporting the Government bond market, but how great are current purchases for account of the numerous Government agencies is another question. Certainly the market has been in need of bidders.

First reaction of some of the large banks here, and doubtless of a great many small banks throughout the country, was that sales of bonds would take place, and that the early bird would get the best worms. However, it was quickly found that theory and practice were far apart in the Government bond market. It proved to be impossible to sell any large amount, and many good-sized offers were therefore withdrawn. Parenthetically, it may be observed that the Government bond market, to the large holder, is about as unliquid an investment as he could find.

Doubtful Experiment.

Large banks will be protected in any event against the effective date of the higher reserves, for they hold large amounts of short-term Treasury bills. The bills can be allowed to run off, giving the banks more cash. Nearly every large banker knows of some small country bank that has none too sound management. Many such banks exist that are loaned to the limit. They will have some problems to solve, and shortly. How other banks will act on knowledge or fear of what their neighbors may do is anybody's guess. It can only be repeated that an experiment is under way and nobody knows how it will turn out.

Another problem in Government fiscal policy now is in the foreground. That is the case of the $1,800,000,000 gold devaluation fund. If, as some suggest, the Federal Reserve Board has this time shown its independence of the Treasury and taken a lead toward putting brakes on the money market, its action easily could be offset by the Treasury. Were the stabilization fund used to retire public debt, the Treasury could increase bank excess reserves to that extent, and shoot them to a new peak.

In the foreign exchanges the franc weakened, with a consequent gain for sterling. That turn indicated a revival of the export of French capital, mostly to London, a movement which is greatly expanding both the circulation of the Bank of England and its gold holdings.

General Electric.

General Electric made little response to publication of its quarterly statement, showing an excellent gain in business and earnings. Actually the earnings were well known around the brokerage offices yesterday, although at least some stockholders with New York City addresses have not yet received the reports. That has been true with most of the important earnings statements—including that of American Telephone—published in recent years. Some improvement in that situation, which involves a distinct advantage to the brokerage house speculators, will come with abandonment of the present system of advance release dates on corporation statements. A far better method, experience has shown, is immediate release on all news. That system has served well the United States Steel Corporation, General Motors and several other corporations which never have given the slightest cause for criticism in the handling of publicity.

Utilities.

The sharp rise in earnings for both General Electric and Westinghouse, reflecting in part the general recovery in business, also focus attention on the possibilities for activity if the public utilities were given a little relief from persecution anxiety. Such relief is possible from the courts and perhaps from the voters this autumn. A veritable boom in public utility capital expenditures is expected to take place should a check be put upon the New Deal's campaign to ruin the public utility industry.

New Mystery.

In the Treasury daily statement for July 11, debt retirement for the elapsed portion of the fiscal year beginning July 1 was $27,591,450. In the same period in the previous fiscal year the amount was $27,591,450. The mystery is how the Treasury can redeem debt in amount corresponding to the exact dollar with redemptions for the like period of last year. Probably, like most other items on the Treasury ledgers, it is nothing but fancy bookkeeping.

Support.

The market for Government securities, soft since announcement of the 50 per cent increase in reserve requirements August 15, has derived a little encouragement from rumors of large buying orders placed by the Federal Reserve Bank for the account of Treasury trust funds. About the time the changed reserve requirements take effect the Treasury will reveal what amounts of its own securities it bought for its trust funds (Government agencies) during July. It has just published the June total, $30,465,400, which compared with $15,000,000 in May and was the largest total since March, when aggregate purchases were $32,000,000.

Fair Trade Practices.

Bond brokers on the exchanges work under conditions that present a continuing problem of regulation by the committee on bonds. One rule issued today restricts any member or firm distributing a customer's order among a number of brokers for execution at the same price. This practice of spreading a fair-sized order increases the odds in favor of the customer when brokers have to match coins to decide which of several orders on a parity is to get the trade. Another rule today fixes the formal procedure for "crossing" trades; it prevents a broker with a selling and buying order at the same price from going off in a corner and mumbling quickly a formula that would let him match the orders, keeping commissions on both sides and possibly keeping one of the customers from getting a better quotation.

Reserve Shifts Up to Treasury, Board Declares

Huge Deposits Withdrawn for Bonus Swells Excess, It Says.

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Reserve Board last night attributed wide fluctuations in excess bank reserves, prior to its order reducing their volume, to the financial operations of the Treasury. In its monthly bulletin the board said that huge government deposits in the Federal Reserve Banks, withdrawn to pay the soldiers' bonus, were flowing thence into the commercial banks to swell their reserve accounts.

Excess reserves are funds deposited with the reserve banks by the commercial banks over and above a specified percentage of their own deposits, which under the law they are forbidden to touch. The excess constitutes, generally speaking, the basis of the money and credit market.

To avoid an "injurious expansion of credit," the board this week ordered a 50 per cent increase in reserve requirements, thus removing an estimated $1,400,000,000—capable of multiplication into ten times that amount of credit—from the money market.

Gold as a Factor.

At that time it cited the tremendous flow of imported gold as the major factor in increasing excess reserves. Going into the background, the Bulletin tonight said that, while, for a time, the Treasury's new practice of depositing large amounts in the Reserve banks, rather than the commercial banks, had reduced reserves, the situation had been reversed in recent weeks.

"Member bank reserve balances, which increased in May and the first half of June largely in reflection of gold imports, were sharply reduced in the third week of June as a result of Treasury fiscal operations," the board said. They increased again in the last half of the month as the Treasury paid out a large amount from its accumulated balances in cashing adjusted service bonds.

"Excess reserves declined from a total of nearly $3,000,000,000 on June 10 to about $2,000,000,000 on June 17, the smallest amount for over a year. By the end of the month, they had risen to $2,700,000,000."

The board then said that for several months the Treasury has maintained a large working balance of cash on hand, with deposits of much more than usual size in the reserve banks. This, it added, for a time kept excess reserves at a lower level than would have been the case if the money had been deposited in commercial banks.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London, July 17.—Industrial stocks moved higher in today's market under the leadership of tobacco, silk and steel issues. Trading was restricted, owing to the settlement of week-end accounts. Oil and gilt-edged securities were firm, while transatlantics shares had a tendency to ease. The mining section closed irregular.

Paris—Government bonds advanced in a steady market, as did industrials, electrical issues, banks and railroads. International shares moved irregularly.

Liverpool—Wheat futures closed about a penny higher, all positions touching new highs for the year. Extremely bullish American and Canadian crop and weather reports, together with a better demand for Canadian wheat, were contributing factors. Cotton closed lower, selling caused by favorable weather reports being absorbed by trade buying on the scale down. Manchester reported a good demand for cloth and a fair business in yarns.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, July 17 (AP).—(U. S. Dept. Agr.). There were scattered purchases of territory and Texas 12-month wools in Boston. Graded half-blood staple territory wool sold at 84@87 cents, scoured basis. A few buyers were still in the market for average to good 12-month Texas wool at 85@87 cents, scoured basis, and for average to good French combing lengths fine territory wools in original bags at 83@85 cents, scoured basis. Efforts were made to buy similar wools at lower prices, but these efforts were successful only on small quantities of good wool. Most of the fine territory wools available at around 80 cents, scoured basis, were either short in staple or of inferior character.

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "As the mythology of pagan Rome has yielded to a more spiritual idea of Deity, so will our material theories yield to spiritual ideas, until the finite gives place to the infinite, sickness to health, sin to holiness, and God's kingdom comes 'in earth, as it is in Heaven.'"

The Federal Diary

By Betty Read.

It has not been held for three years and there will be an enrollment of only 14 selected pupils at whose feet will be laid the accumulated knowledge of one of the oldest and most important Government departments.

This is the foreign service school for embryo diplomats and the State Department is doing some hard organization work getting ready for its students.

Not for three years have there been enough new appointments in the foreign service of the country to warrant a school to teach them the A B C's of treaties, codes, commercial problems, embassy manners and behavior and all the other things they need to know.

In spite of its lapse of classes, this school is the oldest professional one in the Government, those of other departments having been formed after the State Department met the need of teaching its employes the fundamentals of their jobs.

Lowell C. Pinkerton, a foreign service officer who has served as consulate general in London and later as inspector in Europe overseeing the work of various consulates, is the difector of the school and at present is assembling his teaching staff from among the department's experts.

There have been no permanent appointees to the foreign service since 1932, but in October, 1935, a group of young men took the examinations to start their careers as diplomats and 14 passed the written examination and the oral one six months later. They were then assigned to probationary posts for a year or so and are now returning to Washington from Mexico, Cuba, Canada, the West Indies and one or two places in Europe for the final stage of their training. Then they become full fledged diplomats ready to start at the bottom of the ladder. Although no examinations are given in the school, the men must do work satisfactory to their instructors or they are dropped, even at this late date.

Henry P. Dugan, in charge of the important telegraph room of the State Department, will teach them to send secret messages. James O. Murdock, assistant to the legal adviser of the department, will lecture on international law and John Farr Simmons, chief of the visa division, will tell them about immigration regulations and related subjects.

Last May the department found its list of eligibles depleted, so between 800 and 900 young men from 21 to 35 years old took the first set of examinations for service with the State Department. That examination was so stiff, said Pinkerton, that only those with college educations or the equivalent had a chance of passing it. The results of that examination is not yet known, but sometime this fall the ones who passed will take an oral examination and from those successful ones, the eligible list for the department will be made up, to operate much in the manner of the civil service reserve lists which are tapped as the need arises.

Harry Bassett, commissioner of the U. S. Employes Compensation Commission, was made an honorary member of Lodge 39, of the American Federation of Government Employes.

In his acceptance speech, Bassett said he had been a member of a trade union for more than 40 years and that he has served as commissioner with the Compensation Commission for 11 years.

W. J. Rusch, a comparative newcomer to Government circles, has just been appointed the chief of the division of Federal Reserve Issues and Redemption. He takes the pace of Lincoln G. Copeland who was appointed to that office by his personal friend, the late President Harding.

Compared with the length of service many in Washington have given the Government, Rusch is just a youngster although he has spent two and a half years as a field examiner in the Insolvent National Bank division. Comptroller J. F. T. O'Connor made the appointment shortly before he left for a vacation.

Shush! they are being very quiet about it over in the Commerce Department but another movie venture is under way there. For Foreign Trade Week which was around the end of May and the first of June, H. S. Welch, chief of the automotives-aeronautics division wrote a scenario which he directed for Pathe called "Commerce Around the Coffee Cup." This venture was backed by various trades associations and has been shown in more than 300 theaters of the country. In spite of its title it has nothing much to do with coffee but tells of the work of the Department of Commerce

Now there is another such film in prospect.

Welch, who is really an automotive and aeronautics man, came to Washington about a year ago by the Hollywood route. He went off on a movie tangent for a couple of years and wrote scenarios and did some production work there and with this background was selected to do some movie work for the department.
